

G-Men Check Bank Funds Of 50 D. C. Policemen

Mystified Officials Hint White House May Have Ordered Extended Inquiry

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who for several weeks have been investigating members of the Washington Police Department, are now checking bank accounts of 50 or more members of the local force, it was learned last night.

Moreover, it was reported, they are looking into accounts listed in the names of policemen's wives.

At least three high-ranking police officers also were asked about real estate holdings and their wealth in general.

D. C. Authorities Mystified

When the Federal agents first began questioning members of the local force, they explained that it was not an investigation of "the police as such," but merely in connection with investigation of a Police Court condition.

Gradually, however, they extended their investigation and policemen began to complain that the questions asked were extremely personal and couldn't possibly have any bearing on the probe of the Police Court.

The question of who authorized the Department of Justice to make such an investigation appears to be mystifying authorities. It was assumed for a time that the Board of Commissioners made the request. Yesterday, however, The Post ascertained that the Commissioners as a board had taken no such action.

Who then, it was being asked around the District Building, could have called for the investigation? One official wondered out loud whether the White House could have requested it.

Attorney General Murphy at a recent press conference insisted that the Police Department is not being investigated "as such." Yet, according to reliable information, it was someone in the Justice Department who asked the Commissioners to delay promotion of 14 veteran police officers until the investigation is completed.

Commissioner Allen, at the time, however, stated that none of the 14 was under suspicion.

"Undue Emphasis" Protested

Justice Department officials repeatedly have insisted that the probe is concerned with "law enforcement in the District," protesting against "undue emphasis" on the questioning of policemen.

"Lawyers and laymen have been questioned, too," according to department spokesmen.

Meanwhile it was pointed out here that Washington's police department is the only metropolitan force in the country—unless wholesale violations of Federal law are involved—which the Justice Department has power to investigate.

On First Job In 2 Months, Man Falls, Dies

James Otis Smith yesterday pleaded for a job of any sort, went to work painting window frames and died two hours later after toppling 75 feet from a ladder.

Forty-four and jobless for two months, Smith went to Arthur Lowe, contractor with offices at 1048 Twenty-ninth street northwest, and begged for work.

Edward Hutton, employed at a workbench inside the Twenty-ninth street building, said he called through an open window to Smith, telling him he looked sick. Smith replied from the ladder that he sometimes had "dizzy" spells.

He died in Emergency Hospital. An autopsy revealed a fractured skull and broken neck.

Woman of 40 Jailed in Stabbing Of Husband

A 40-year-old woman was arrested early this morning after her husband had been stabbed with a butcher knife and seriously wounded.

Mrs. Elizabeth Tabler was taken to the Women's Bureau and charged with assault with a dangerous weapon shortly after her husband, Otis, 42, a bond salesman, was taken to Emergency Hospital.

According to police, Tabler was stabbed in the chest in an argument in their apartment at 3601 Connecticut avenue.

Goldner Tells of Captivity in Dry Well; Ill but Happy at Release; Let Go With Vows of Eternal Friendship

By the Associated Press

Jerusalem, July 25.—Exhausted and ill as a result of eating Arab tribal food, the Rev. Gerould Goldner, 29, kidnaped Ohio minister, was returned to the Holy City and the arms of his father today, just a week after he had been taken captive by a wandering Arab band in the Moab Hills.

Describing the experience, which ended in a friendship feast with his captors, the young pastor declared it was an adventure "I'll never forget nor want to do over again."

The overjoyed father, Dr. Jacob Goldner, also an Ohio minister, and the son made no mention of a ransom payment, but it was learned that the Bedouin emissary who conducted the final negotiations carried $2,500 on his trip into the hills—half the amount that was originally demanded.

District Commissioner Keith Roach, driving his automobile between Bethlehem and Hebron, saw Goldner riding a donkey toward Jerusalem, ascertained his identity and rushed him to his waiting

Sibyl Baker to Direct

Under Lewis Barrett

Miss Sibyl Baker, supervisor of District playgrounds under the present recreation setup, will become general assistant in charge of program in the new system to go into operation August 1, it was learned yesterday.

Head of playgrounds for eight years, Miss Baker will accept a salary reduction, it is understood, in becoming general assistant to Lewis R. Barrett, newly appointed recreation administrator.

Ranking below Miss Baker will be four assistant recreational directors. Recommendations for these positions today will be submitted by Barrett to a subcommittee of the District Recreation Board.

Parking Banned

Meanwhile the Commissioners, seeking to insure District children safe access to playgrounds, banned parking from 9:30 a. m. to 6:30 p. m. on both sides of streets adjacent to unfenced playgrounds.

Parking also is prohibited within 50 feet of either side of all entrances to enclosed playgrounds. The new regulations are based on recommendations by a committee consisting of Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, Miss Baker, Thomas W. Gosling, former assistant superintendent of schools, and Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel.

Barrett has been requested to include in today's report to Engineer

First Night Session Set on Lending Bill

Barkley Serves Notice There Will Be No Adjournment Till Work Is Done

By Robert C. Albright

Democratic leaders returned from the White House yesterday to launch the Senate on its last stormy night of the session—the struggle for enactment of the President's $2,490,000,000 lending program.

After salvaging the measure from a two-day parliamentary snarl, Senate Majority Leader Barkley made a speech in support of the program and then ordered a night session to-night to speed consideration.

Barkley flatly served notice that no move will be made to adjourn Congress until the greatly modified works financing bill is disposed of.

House Caucus Called

House Majority Leader Rayburn merely said: "We told the President we will be ready to adjourn by August 5."

Meanwhile the lending bill, facing rough going in the House as well as the Senate, was slated with other log-jammed measures for House Democratic caucus consideration, as 51 members signed a caucus call petition designed to assure action before adjournment.

Senate Republicans and some Democrats continued a riddling fire of amendments aimed at the program, and the controversial WPA prevailing wage issue definitely was slated to be tossed into the lending bill fight.

"Socialism by Stealth"

Senator Murray (Democrat), of Montana, informed a Senate Appropriations subcommittee that the prevailing wage restoration amendment will be offered by Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, as a lending program "rider." Murray abandoned his attempt for separate legislative action.

A report by the Republican special committee on national debt policy vigorously attacked the "spend to lend" theory and questioned whether loans made will prove "self-liquidating."

The committee, headed by Representative Reed (Republican), of New York, referred to the program as "State socialism by stealth" and labeled it a "device for increasing the public debt by subterfuge."

Barkley Opens Debate

The report said the $800,000,000 proposed for the United States Housing Authority "can be said to be self-liquidating only because the Federal Government will give grants-in-aid to local housing authorities in order to pay back the loans made."

The lending bill finally bobbed to the top of the Senate calendar at 4 p. m. after a legislative tangle in which the Ashurst bill to create eight new judgeships and a motion by Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, to reconsider passage of the "truth in fabrics" bill both threatened to hold up the Administration's key measure indefinitely.

With the Ashurst bill finally passed, and agreement reached to

Gray Line Bus Drivers, Lecturers To Strike Today

Union drivers and lecturers operating buses of the Gray Line Sightseeing Co. last night unanimously voted to strike until the firm yields on wage demands guaranteeing a full day's pay to each employee asked to report for work regardless of the number of hours worked.

According to union leaders, "not a bus will move" after 8 o'clock this morning. They said that the company's personnel of about 130 employees was almost completely unionized.

F. C. Will, secretary and member of the executive committee of local division 1138, Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, said the strike vote, taken at a meeting attended by more than three-fourths of the local's membership, was unanimous.

Joseph Wylatt, attorney for the bus company, last night admitted that the employees were highly unionized but said he was not sure that the strike would be completely effective.

Deadline Monday On Tangible Tax

Deputy Assessor C. A. Russell yesterday warned District residents to file their returns on tangible personal property before next Monday's deadline or face a 20 per cent penalty. The period for filing expires at midnight that day.

Items included in the tax are household furnishings, jewelry, boats, stocks in trade and fixtures.

Roosevelt Scouts Farley Ouster Story

Delays Hatch Action; Gov. Bricker of Ohio Declares for Taft For Presidency

By William V. Nessler

President Roosevelt yesterday characterized as tommyrot the oft-heard report that Thomas G. Corcoran, White House adviser, is seeking to have Postmaster General Farley ousted as Democratic National chairman.

He declared, in reference to another rumor, that Farley without question still will be the Postmaster General when he returns from the European trip on which he is sailing today.

Another question at the President's press conference failed to bring a direct reply on whether he would sign the Hatch bill which imposes sharp restrictions on political activity of many Federal officeholders. The President said that bill had been received from Congress and would be referred to Government departments for study in line with the usual procedure.

Bricker Out for Taft

Another political development of the day consisted of growing indications that Senator Taft, of Ohio, will become an active candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, with the blessing of Gov. John W. Bricker of Ohio, himself frequently mentioned as a possible candidate.

At Columbus, Gov. Bricker said yesterday he was not considering seeking the nomination but was more interested in obtaining a second term as Governor. He added he thought Taft "would make a very good President."

Here Senator Taft replied, "Gov. Bricker and I have always been good friends and I appreciate his kind words."

Senator to Speak Soon

Political circles recalled that several weeks ago Taft made a trip to his home State and there conferred at length with the Governor, admittedly of politics. At that time there was speculation that they might have been considering the possibility of an understanding that would leave only one of them in the field as a "favorite son."

Associates of the Senator indicated yesterday that a statement from him might be expected soon.

Regarding the Hatch bill, which has been interpreted as threatening New Deal control of the next Democratic convention, the President agreed with an expressed opinion that there might be some principles of Government, constitutionality and free speech involved, but he said he had not read the bill.

He gave no further information on his Sunday conference with Farley at Hyde Park, a conference that was widely heralded as a probable "show-down" over Farley's role in the 1940 campaign. Following the conference, Mr. Roosevelt only commented that his conferences with Farley in the past had been effective and he expected they would continue to be.

Five Prostrated By Humidity and 90-Degree Heat

Five persons were prostrated here yesterday as 90-degree temperature and excessive humidity gave the city its most severe taste of summer heat since July 13.

Fair weather with temperatures still above normal was forecast for today, except for a local thundershower in the afternoon.

Those treated for heat exhaustion were: George Porter, colored, 45, 1254 Half street southeast, and Willard Peterson, colored, 27, of 647 Second street northeast, both taken to Georgetown Hospital after they were overcome on construction jobs.

Raymond Young, 22, 1617 Florida avenue northeast, treated at Freedmen's.

Logan S. Gain, 42, 3500 Fourteenth street northwest, overcome at Fourteenth and F streets northwest and treated there by an Emergency Hospital physician.

Senate Group Favors Killing Japanese Pact; 2 Missionaries Slapped

Americans Attacked Despite Pass Letting Them Through Lines; Embassy to Protest

By the United Press

Shanghai (Wednesday), July 26.—Two American missionaries have reported to the United States Embassy in Peiping that they were slapped by Japanese soldiers when attempting to pass through Japanese lines between the North China capital and their post outside the city, a reliable informant said today.

The missionaries, both Catholics, are M. E. Smithberger, of Hampton, Minn., and Daniel Scannell, of New York.

The attacks were made despite the fact the Americans had produced passes entitling them to travel, the informant said.

It was expected the embassy would protest immediately.

The incident followed a statement by Secretary of State Hull in Washington that he was increasingly alarmed at attacks on Americans by armed Japanese in China and came a few hours after Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, retiring commander in chief of the U. S. Asiatic Fleet, had protested to the Japanese against the beating of an American sailor by a Japanese sentry in Hankow.

Japan to Blockade Canton

By the Associated Press

Hongkong, July 25.—The Japanese navy announced today that it would close the Canton River for two weeks beginning at midnight tomorrow in a move reported reliably as designed to blockade shipping between Canton and this British crown colony.

Simultaneously with the closing of the river, for "military reasons," it was said the Japanese also planned to blockade the British and French concessions on Shamen Island at Canton.

Foreign quarters at Canton were without official information, however, on the reported plans to blockade the British and French concessions at Canton, where the United States consulate and American business houses are located.

A radio message tonight from the British steamer Haitan said the 3,554-ton ship had struck a mine off the China coast which tore a hole in her side and flooded her holds. The ship was in no immediate danger.

Anti-British Drive Continues

Shanghai, July 25 (AP).—Britain's agreement to recognize Japan's right-of-way in occupied Chinese areas failed to halt the spreading anti-British campaign in North China today.

The Japanese-sponsored political party at Peiping ordered branches in Shansi, Shantung, Hopei and Honan provinces to tighten anti-British boycotts through the use of theaters, motion pictures, posters and cartoons.

Announcing the agreement in the House of Commons yesterday, British Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax said it was expected to halt anti-British demonstrations in China.

Japanese at Tientsin said they would not relax their blockade of the British and French concessions there until they saw how the British carried out their commitments.

In Shanghai, the British protested against detention of H. Rose, chief of the International Settlement municipal council's public health department, held with 100 Chinese and a Russian—all employees of the department—by order of the Chinese puppet mayor.

The Chinese press termed "another Munich" Britain's agreement to keep out of the way of the Japanese army in China. It said Britain would be guilty of violating the Nine-Power Pact if she followed her "neutrality policy."

'Lost Colony's' Burial Site Believed Found in S. Carolina

By the United Press

Gainesville, Ga., July 25.—Discovery of the long-hidden burial ground of 64 English settlers—survivors of the famous "lost colony" of Roanoke Island, N. C.—was disclosed tonight by Dr. H. J. Pearce, Southern historian and president of Brenau College.

Pearce and his son, Dr. Haywood Pearce, Jr., of Emory University, Atlanta, said 13 crudely carved slabs of granite and sandstone had been found on a wooded hill near Gainesville, S. C., recording the burial of the 64 first American colonists who fled from their coastal settlement to escape warlike Indians.

The father-son team of historians issued a joint statement, saying the

Britain, Soviet Reported in Agreement

Military Mission to Be Sent, London Hears; Baltic Issue Remains

By Ralph W. Barnes

Special Cable to The Post

London, July 25.—A new wave of reserved optimism swept London tonight as success appeared imminent in the prolonged effort to win Soviet Russian adherence to the Anglo-French military alliance.

On the heels of disclosure that Britain and France had acceded to Moscow's request for general staff conversations, it was reliably reported that Prime Minister Chamberlain was planning a detailed announcement—possibly of agreement in principle—in the House of Commons next week.

Reports were current that British and French military missions, representing the three fighting arms, would be dispatched to Moscow in the near future. Maj. Gen. Sir Edmund Ironside, inspector general of overseas forces, who conducted the Anglo-Polish military talks at Warsaw, was suggested as head of the British delegation.

London and Paris decided to send the missions, it was understood, after capitulating to a Soviet demand that a military convention

Japan Calls Up Naval Reserves In Soviet Crisis

Tokyo (Wednesday), July 26 (AP).—The Japanese admiralty today called naval reservists to active duty and simultaneously it was disclosed that a new squadron has been organized and attached to the combined fleet for "special maneuvers," which observers believed connected with the friction with Russia over the Sakhalin Island oil and coal concessions.

Japan has 175,000 naval reservists, compared with more than 100,000 regulars serving with the fleet. Last Friday a navy spokesman said Japan was assembling her fleet in northern waters because of the "extremely serious" situation over Sakhalin.

Passage of the Vandenberg resolution, Pittman said, would be an "advisory" act informing both the President and Japan of the Senate's attitude, and would "leave us complete freedom of action for any steps that might seem desirable at the next regular session, or perhaps at a special session, of Congress."

Vandenberg Proposal Accorded Democratic Support on Foreign Relations Committee

By the United Press

Democratic members of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee joined last night in predicting favorable action today on a resolution by Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, providing for abrogation within six months of the friendship-in-commerce treaty of 1911 between the United States and Japan.

Chairman Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, said he would ask committee approval of the resolution, an advisory measure declaring it "the sense of the Senate" that the executive branch give Tokyo the six months' notice required for abrogation of the treaty, "so that the United States may be free to deal with Japan in the formulation of a new treaty and in the protection of American interests as new necessities may require."

Oppose Brussels Council

Sensors George (Democrat), of Georgia; Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, and Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, said that they, like Pittman, would support a section calling for treaty abrogation, but not a section favoring reconvening of the 1937 Conference of Brussels, now in recess, to determine whether Japan is guilty of violating the Nine-Power Treaty guaranteeing the territorial integrity of China.

Pepper and Schwellenbach said they preferred immediate legislation embargoing shipment of American war supplies and essential materials to Japan, but will favor abrogation of the treaty if stronger action can be obtained.

Pepper described increased Senate sentiment in favor of the resolution "as the direct result of recent Japanese beating and man-handling of American nationals in China."

Resentment in U. S. Rising

These incidents, he said, are causing "a steady tide of rising resentment, so much so that more than 75 per cent of the people would favor immediate enactment of embargo legislation against Japan."

Schwellenbach said there was "no question" of the United States' legal right to embargo supplies to Japan immediately, "because Japan has repeatedly violated both the nine-power treaty and the 1911 pact, both of which require her to guarantee protection of American nationals and their rights."

"I see no reason," he added, "why we should continue to supply Japan with the materials whereby such violations are made possible, and I shall ask the committee to act on my resolution providing an immediate embargo."

The Foreign Relations Committee recently asked an opinion from Secretary of State Hull whether the 1911 treaty would be violated by the embargo. Hull suggested the advisability of taking the matter up later.

Careful Consideration Promised

He said careful consideration would be given an expression of the Senate on the treaty. At his press conference yesterday, however, Mr. Roosevelt said he had given no thought to the proposed notice of treaty abrogation.

Passage of the Vandenberg resolution, Pittman said, would be an "advisory" act informing both the President and Japan of the Senate's attitude, and would "leave us complete freedom of action for any steps that might seem desirable at the next regular session, or perhaps at a special session, of Congress."

THE KING'S ADVENTURE
(In the garden behind Windsor Castle, the King is entertaining the children as an American hot dog picnic.)

QUEEN: Now, Lilybet, you'll be Queen one day, so listen to what Daddy tells you about the American people.

LILYBET: Did you meet Shirlie Temple?
KING: No, but I met Cactus Jack Garner. He's immense.
LILYBET: Is he the one who's going to be President some day, like a crown prince?
KING: Well, I really don't know. He showed me six or eight men who are going to be the next President.

QUEEN: But Garner's the one who slapped you on the back. I saw you gulp.

LILYBET: That ought to get him a million votes.
KING: Yeah, but he'd have to slap a million backs for the next million.

MARG. ROSE: Are these hot dogs just like the ones you ate with the Roosevelt?

QUEEN: Yes, except that I inspected the mutton that went into these. I thought Cactus Jack Hull was the nicest.

LILYBET: Are all their statesmen called Cactus Jack?

QUEEN: Yes, there's Cactus Jack Vandenberg and Cactus Jack Taft and a Cactus Jack Dewey.

KING: Darling, I think you have it confused. They call Garner Cactus Jack because he made a lot of Jack raising cactus.

QUEEN: They're all cactus to the President, aren't they, Bertie, tell me what a Vice President does.

KING: Well, as I understand it, under their New Deal the Vice President holds a sword over the President's head to remind him that he's merely mortal.

MARG. ROSE: That's the job I'd like. I'm getting hungry. May I have mini-sauce with my hot dog?

QUEEN: I don't remember any mini-sauce at the Roosevelt.

Now, what was it you want Lilybet to remember when she's Queen?

KING: Never forget, daughter, that the Irish run American politics, and that they blame the English for the potato famine.

LILYBET: But what are the Americans like? What's Cactus Jack like?

KING: No two Americans are alike. Take Garner. He's like a pirate's Santa Claus. Take Hull. He's like the Dean of Westminster. Roosevelt is a little like Winston Churchill.

LILYBET: Daddy, what was your opinion of President Roosevelt?

KING: He's a mighty likable chap, but I suspect that he wants to use our fleet to protect American interests. He wants us to pull American chestnuts out of the fire.

QUEEN: Clever people, these Americans. Tell Lilybet what you really think of them. Some of the Congressmen looked at me so strangely. I blushed all over.

KING: So you still blush? So do I. By the time Lilybet is Queen maybe we'll be Americans enough to know the Americans. They have plenty of troubles, too. But I wish the Channel were as wide as the Atlantic.

LILYBET: Maybe we could all move to Canada some day.

KING: You're a clever girl, Lilybet. Perhaps we should have moved over long ago. Perhaps we will some day, and just keep England as an air and naval base.

$407,000,000 Bill For Rivers Shelved

The Senate Commerce Committee yesterday agreed to pigeonhole for the present session of Congress the $407,000,000 flood control, rivers and harbors bill.

The legislation, carrying authorization for approximately 60 projects, was set aside in a special meeting. The committee's head, Senator Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, after a conference with Senate Majority Leader Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, said "it appeared that the bringing up of the $407,000,000 bill at this stage of the session would not be encouraged by the Administration."

New Dealers Call Caucus on 'Must' Measures

Rep. McKeough Says Action Will Be Asked On WPA and Lending

By John B. Oakes.

Rising anger of New Dealers against the "reactionary coalition" of conservative Democrats and Republicans in the House took concrete form yesterday with the filing of a caucus call and a demand for immediate action on housing, lending and the WPA.

After the caucus call was preceded with 34 signatures, one more than the requisite number, Representative McKeough (Democrat), of Illinois, leader of the group, issued a statement clearly indicating the cleavage between liberal and conservative wings of the party. "It is the sense of members signing the caucus call," he said, "that no adjournment takes place until this necessary legislation has been passed or the responsibility for the failure to pass is properly placed upon the reactionary coalition consisting of a small bloc of Democrats and practically the entire Republican membership of the House."

Win Concession

The caucus, which must be held by Friday, was demanded over the opposition of Administration leaders who preferred to exercise more discreet pressure in their effort to bring out "must" legislation.

Before the caucus call was filed, the signers had already obtained one important victory in receiving assurances that the bill doubling the loan capacity of the United States Housing Authority would be voted out of the Rules Committee, where a Republican-Conservative Democratic alliance had been bottling it up.

The housing measure, raising to $1,600,000,000 USHA's loan authorization and increasing annual Federal subsidies from $28,000,000 to $73,000,000, may be reported out today.

One conservative Democratic member said that the only reason the bill might reach the floor of the House, was a general feeling of regard for Majority Leader Rayburn.

Other members saw a possible connection between the bill's improved prospects and action on the Rules Committee yesterday in speeding bringing out a measure amended to protect Southern cotton warehouses from the proposed Anglo-American exchange of cotton for strategic war materials.

The Rules Committee, however, failed to solve the bitterly-disputed question of amending the wage-hour law. Representative Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina, proponent of broad exemptions for agricultural industries, and his two chief antagonists, Chairman Norton of the Labor Committee, and Wage-Hour Administrator Andrews, wrangled for two hours before the Rules Committee only to be told to try again to reach a compromise.

Pointing out that an agreement had been vainly sought for months, Mrs. Norton, nevertheless, arranged a meeting for tomorrow. However, Southern supporters of Barden on the Rules Committee, who, together with the Republicans, comprise a majority, indicated they might wait for a compromise no longer than today. They threatened to grant a rule today permitting the Barden amendment to be brought to the floor.

At yesterday's torrid hearing before the Rules Committee, Mrs. Norton and Barden flatly contradicted each other. Bringing out into the open a feud that has gone on in the Labor Committee for months, Mrs. Norton charged that during committee deliberations on amending the wage-hour law, Barden would express complete agreement "and then he would go out in the corridors and meet some of these lobby interests and the first thing we knew he had changed his mind again."

Vigorously denying this allegation, Barden in turn accused Mrs. Norton of bad faith. He asserted that at a recent hearing of a special Labor sub-committee appointed to work out a compromise between his and the Administration's views, "the first shot out of the box, they asked if I was willing to yield on specified wage-hour exemptions for agriculture." Barden said he refused "and we had nothing left to talk about."

Andrews, who, with Mrs. Norton, is supporting amendments to the wage-hour law designed to relieve "hardship cases," charged that Barden's amendments would remove from the protection of the law 2,000,000 workers.

Finally, Representative Nelson (Democrat), of Missouri, a member of the Rules Committee, asked each of the three witnesses if they were willing to confer again in an effort to reach a compromise. As she left the committee room, Mrs. Norton remarked that "I don't blame the Rules Committee for trying to shelve its responsibility—it's in a tough spot."

Meanwhile, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, released a letter to Barden in which he said that most of Barden's amendments "are highly objectionable" to the federation. The wage-hour act, said Green, "should at least remain as it is."

Sponsors of the Democratic caucus, which threatens to become an intra-party free-for-all, are chiefly organization Democrats, many from the larger cities. In announcing the caucus, McKeough stated that the "reactionary coalition" had operated "throughout this Congress to defeat humanitarian and progressive measures, and is attempting to sabotage

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

GEORGE GALLUP

A study of opinions among a representative sample or cross-section of voters throughout the country, using methods which have proved accurate in forecasting many elections during the last four years, the American Institute of Public Opinion, put this issue to the voters:

"The head of the WPA says WPA workers who go on strike will be dropped from the WPA after five days on strike. Do you approve or disapprove of this action?"

Preliminary returns, which were reported last week, indicated 74 per cent approval. The final returns show no change on the figures:

Approve 74%
Disapprove 26%
Although members of the Workers Alliance of America, a WPA union, have been staging demonstrations against the WPA dismissals and the new WPA wage scale, approximately half of WPA and destroy existing labor and liberal legislation enacted by previous Congresses of the Roosevelt Administration."

Reported to have assisted McKeough in circulating the petition for the caucus were Representatives Healey and Casey, of Massachusetts; Bradley, Meyers, Sacks and McCord, of Pennsylvania; Coffee and Gavanagh and Byrne, of New York.

Although the 51 signatures mean that the caucus must be called, the party rules provide that it will have no effect unless half the Democratic membership is present.

Sponsors of the caucus face the possibility that it might be killed through absence of a quorum—a situation that occurred two years ago when some members vainly tried to hold a caucus on behalf of the embryonic wage-hour act.

Coalition Halts House Passage Of Rail Bill

Bi-Partisan Bloc Threatens to Strike Out Waterway Provisions

A night session drive to pass the Lea transportation bill was suddenly halted last night when a coalition of seacoast and inland waterway House members threatened to strike from the measure all provision for Interstate Commerce Commission regulation of water carriers.

An agreement to vote on the water-carrier provisions went over until today, when the bipartisan waterways bloc led by Representative Warren (Democrat), of North Carolina, and Representative Wadsworth (Republican), of New York, demonstrated unexpected strength.

Earlier, the bloc had forced the approval of an amendment by Wadsworth instructing the ICC to permit all carriers to reduce rates virtually at will provided rates remained compensatory, meeting all costs.

Adoption of the Wadsworth amendment by a 147 to 119 tally vote was regarded as a preliminary victory for the waterways coalition, as it would effectively maintain the differential they have sought between rail and water freight rates.

Strikes at Key Section
House Majority Leader Rayburn took the floor in a futile effort to stop the Wadsworth amendment, informing House members it would delay decisions in rate disputes and add to the cost of rate cases.

Elimination of provisions for I. C. C. regulation of water carriers, proposed in an amendment by Representative South (Democrat), of Texas strikes at a key section of the measure. If the House adopts it today, leaders believed it would remove all probability of final enactment of rail legislation this year.

The Senate already has passed a sharply conflicting bill, and Majority Leader Barkley has indicated conference action would go over until next year, even if the House passed the bill.

At least three other important controversies remain in the House measure after the water carrier amendment is disposed of today. Opposition was developing over payment of full rates by the Government on land grant railroads, over new RFC loans to the railroads when private funds are not available for consolidation, reorganization, maintenance and construction financing, and over proposed Government sharing of costs of new bridges built to replace structures found obstructing navigation.

Called Anti-Railroad Bill
As the waterways bloc gained the upperhand in yesterday's voting, Representative Martin (Democrat), of Colorado, charged the transportation bill was being changed to an anti-railroad measure and it would be in the interest of the roads to "strike out the enacting clause."

Coastal opposition to I. C. C. water carrier regulation centered on their charges that water lines would be regulated in the interest of the railroads, that it would increase transportation charges by raising rate levels and result in transfer of large water-borne commerce to the railroads.

Chairman Lea, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, replied that these fears are "without substantial foundation," that reasonable regulation on the other hand would benefit the water lines by bringing them a new stability and standing in transportation. Before the final vote on passage, Lea plans to move again to overturn the votes by which water carrier and agricultural blocs already have altered the bill.

Senate Authorizes Naming of 8 New U. S. Judges

By the Associated Press
The Senate passed yesterday a bill authorizing President Roosevelt to appoint two additional circuit judges and six new district judges.

Senate approval, without a record vote, sent the measure to the House.

The new circuit judges would be provided for the Circuit comprising Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Tennessee; and the Eighth Circuit, which covers Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Five of the district judgeships would be created for the Southern California, New Jersey, Western Oklahoma, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New York districts, and the sixth would be for both the Northern and Southern Districts of Florida.

D.C. Heads Approve 6 Promotions for Fire Department

The commissioners yesterday approved the appointment of three new lieutenants and three sergeants for the Fire Department. They will be sworn into office today at 10 a. m. in the presence of Fire Chief Stephen Porter, who recommended their appointment.

Sgt. A. N. Wright, of No. 2 Engine, will be attached with No. 2 Truck as lieutenant; Sgt. Z. O. Law, of Engine 31, to Truck 1 as lieutenant; and Sgt. Alexander Whitman, of Truck 14, to Engine 2 as lieutenant. Sgt. Whitman was commended for his work on the Kann warehouse fire.

Private J. R. Barry will assume duties as sergeant at Engine 10; C. G. Metzner, sergeant at Engine 31 and J. R. Ludlam as sergeant at Truck 14. Ludlam was also commended in connection with his work on the Kann warehouse fire.

McNinch, Ill Since April 1, Seeks to Quit

President Indicates He Will Accept Resignation Of FCC Chairman

Frank R. McNinch, who for some time has been in ill health, told President Roosevelt yesterday that he wished to resign as chairman of the Federal Communications Commission.

Emerging from a White House luncheon with the President, McNinch indicated to newspapermen that his resignation would be accepted. The President revealed at his press conference later in the day that an announcement probably would be made shortly.

McNinch said that owing to his health, he felt the administrative burdens of the office were too great. There was no definite indication as to who might be appointed to succeed him. F. M. Craven, a commission member, has the support of broadcasting concerns and radio manufacturers.

Others mentioned as possibilities include former Gov. Philip F. La Follette of Wisconsin, and former Representative Otha D. Wearin, of Iowa, unsuccessful Administration candidate for the Democratic senatorial nomination in the purge fight last year against Senator Gillette.

Craven, formerly an engineer with the commission, was one of two commissioners who opposed the McNinch "purge" in FCC personnel last fall and his attempt to exempt all key positions in the commission from civil service.

The FCC reorganization bill, which McNinch sponsored, would have forced these commissioners into retirement, its opponents charged.

McNinch, formerly chairman of the Federal Power Commission, was transferred to the FCC in the fall of 1937 to do a cleanup job there.

He has been on sick leave since April 1, said to be suffering from a stomach disorder. When he finally leaves the FCC, he said, he hopes to be able to find something easier. There has been some talk of an other appointment for McNinch.

The bill to reorganize the commission, introduced by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, appears to have been shelved indefinitely.

Man From Texas Stabbed by Two At Gas Station

Two colored men who told police "we don't like people from Texas" were arrested last night and charged with stabbing Lloyd Price, 23, of Athens, Tex., when he drove into a gas station at Eleventh street and Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Price said the men gave him the same message when he approached his car early yesterday and slashed at him with knives.

While Price was on his way to Emergency Hospital, another motorist, Earl Pennington, 35, of 1924 N street northwest, was attacked by two colored men at the same station. Pennington and Price both were released from Emergency after treatment for flesh wounds.

The men arrested said they both lived in the 2100 block of Ninth

India Invites U.S. Financing, Says Banker Visiting Here

B. T. Thakur, of Karachi, India, president of the India Chamber of Commerce, shown with his wife at the Willard Hotel yesterday.

This Country Should Learn to Be Creditor Nation, President of Indian Chamber of Commerce, Advises

B. T. Thakur, tycoon of Karachi, India, banker and president of the Indian Chamber of Commerce, a portly man with an Eastern smile and an admiration for the warmth of Americans, held a press conference here yesterday.

"Whew, but it is hot," he began. "Certainly it is hot in India. But we don't wear this sort of clothing." His eyes swept his dark blue suit. And then:

America should learn to be what she is, a creditor Nation. America should invest her vast wealth in nations of peaceful intent, India, for example. The investments should be from a co-operative viewpoint so that profitable interchange of finance and economies would result.

About Japan: India has nothing to fear in that quarter, Japan, the banker says, is engaged in China for some time to come. Of England: the banker had some very ripe observations but he didn't want to be quoted. Ghandi is the "liberator of India." This he said in one clipped sentence and said no more. And of Germany he was very emphatic also, his eyes narrowing on the name. The Indians thought Germany a very worthwhile nation until the era of persecuting the Jews began. Then the Indians turned against Germany, and for that reason, Thakur stated.

India is wide awake, he said. There are movements for the masses there, just as there are here, the banker said, almost inquisitively. And of India's hope, he believed it lay in industrialization. India wants outside capital—but not in a dominating capacity. It wants outside capital to invest co-operatively.

Mrs. Thakur accompanied her husband here. She was attired in Indian clothing and wore a small diamond in her right nostril. They have visited much of the United States in the last month, and, leaving here Thursday, will stop at Atlantic City before sailing for home.

Pendergast Aide Indicted In City Survey

McElroy Faces Fraud Trial in $356,500 Water Leak Case

By the Associated Press
Kansas City, July 25.—Henry F. McElroy, who was city manager for 13 years under the Boss Tom Pendergast Democratic machine, was indicted by a county grand jury today for conspiracy to obtain money under false pretenses in connection with a water leak survey which cost the city $356,500.

Indicted jointly with him on the charge were John J. Rathford, head of the Rathford Engineering Co., which collected the money, and J. J. Pryor, contractor whose office allegedly received many of the warrants in payment for the survey.

McElroy, Rathford and Pryor already are under county grand jury indictment for embezzlement.

McElroy became ill shortly after he resigned under fire last April as the Pendergast machine began to crumble. Seventy-three years old, he has been reported near death several times.

Pendergast is serving a 15-month term in Leavenworth for income tax evasion.

McElroy's daughter was the victim of a sensational kidnapping case several years ago. She was released unharmed.

Michael DeWaters, deposed street cleaning commissioner, also was indicted, charged with conspiracy to obtain money under false pretenses in connection with pay roll pads. Named with him was E. Mont Reilly, Republican friend of Pendergast and a former Governor of Puerto Rico. Reilly has been operating a loan concern near the city hall.

1 Killed, 2 Hurt In Labor Battle At Bridge Project

Millersburg, Ind., July 25 (AP).—One man was fatally wounded, another critically injured and a third seriously beaten in a pitched battle today between union and nonunion labor at a bridge under construction near here.

John Pinkerton, 35, a union man, died this afternoon in an Evansville hospital from gunshot wounds. George Hammond, Millersburg, was in the hospital critically wounded. Gerald Scales, 36, a nonunion worker, was seriously wounded.

Authorities said witnesses reported a group carrying rifles, shotguns and clubs rushed the nonunion work gang at the bridge. C. P. Olinger, the contractor, previously had been warned to employ union labor on the project, it was reported.

Londoner Elected World Baptist Head By Delegates of 60 Nations at Atlanta

By the Associated Press
Atlanta, July 25.—Dr. James Henry Rushbrooke, an urbane, white-bearded Londoner committed to individualism in religion, tonight began a five-year tenure as president of the Baptist World Alliance.

Against a background of verbal assault on totalitarian life—a theme which Dr. Rushbrooke accentuated in his report as general secretary yesterday—the venerable Briton was elected by acclamation to succeed Dr. George W. Truett, of Dallas.

Newest criticism of governmental pressure on individuals came tonight from another Londoner, Mrs. Ernest T. Brown, gray-haired, energetic wife of the British minister of labor, who appealed for protection of church, school and press freedom as the three citadels of democracy.

"There are many antitheses to be drawn between the totalitarian and representative society," said Mrs. Brown in her address to Baptists of 60 nations assembled in open-air gathering at Atlanta's baseball stadium.

"A democratic people knows there are certain institutions which must be autonomous," she told the sixth alliance congress.

Mrs. Brown's address climaxed the fourth day of the congress, which earlier in the day heard and by unanimous vote referred to the committee on resolutions a commission report recommending an international court of justice, supported by an international police force, as a guard against world conflict.

Dr. Rushbrooke, who has served continuously as general secretary since 1928, was chosen president in a standing vote called by Dr. Truett to accept the report of the nominations committee. The committee offered no other candidate for the office.

Dr. W. O. Lewis, of Paris, France, was similarly elected general secretary, succeeding Dr. Rushbrooke.

Sailor Admits Killing at Sea

Providence, R. I., July 25 (AP).—A seaman who went berserk with a hammer on an oil tanker pleaded not guilty late today to the murder of a shipmate and assault on another.

Bee Swann, 42, of Gladewater, Tex., was arraigned on the two charges shortly after being removed from the tanker S. S. Dungeness. Swann was accused of slaying Steward Jesse Ortega, of Port Arthur, Tex., at sea Sunday, and beating Oiler Robert L. Dean, 29, of New Orleans, La., who is in a Norfolk, Va., hospital.

Red-Nazi Deal Called Spur To Hurry Allies

Trade Negotiation Held Effort to Force Better Pact With England

By the Associated Press
Berlin, July 25.—Nazi Germany and Communist Russia, ideological opposites, have embarked at a time of grave international tension upon trade negotiations, announcing to the world that they are desirous of increasing the commerce between them.

Neither side believes it is yielding in its abhorrence for the political system of the other by perfecting machinery for bartering Russian raw materials for German industrial products.

That trade talks are resumed at this particular time is significant. It is evident from utterances and attitudes on both sides that these trade talks fit into the political maneuvers of both powers.

Believed Welcoming Talks
Foreign diplomatic quarters in Berlin are convinced that Joseph Stalin in Moscow welcomes the negotiations as a means of inducing the British and French to improve their offers for a mutual aid pact with Russia.

As for the Germans, their official spokesmen never fail to mention the possibility that Poland may find herself ground between the German and Russian milstones.

They do not go so far as to say that a German-Russian alliance may result, but they do say that "a strong national alliance with the Jewish influence eliminated" would "make an ideal partner" for Germany.

The purpose and scope of the present negotiations is explained by German authorities to be the following:

In 1926 a revolving credit of 300,000,000 Reichsmarks (about $120,000,000) was established for the purchase of German industrial goods by Soviet Russia. This arrangement worked so well and the Russians met all their obligations so promptly that trade between the two nations soon reached a figure of 800,000,000 Reichsmarks (about $320,000,000).

The volume decreased gradually, however, until last year it was less than 100,000,000 Reichsmarks ($40,000,000).

With Germany's tremendous rearmament program, however, the need of better Russian-German relations became evident. The present negotiations are a result.

What the Germans want to obtain on a mutual basis is the hitherto is manganese and other ores, lumber, gasoline and oil, and raw chemicals such as sulphur.

The Russians want chiefly machinery with which to manufacture all sorts of needed tools and spare parts.

British-Russian Accord Reported

should be drawn up without waiting for the proposed triple alliance to become effective.

This compromise was said to have been reached in a conference in Moscow Sunday afternoon, and to have been approved formally when Lord Halifax consulted at the foreign office today with Soviet Ambassador Ivan M. Maisky.

The British and French, however, still do not see eye to eye with the Soviets as to how far the proposed alliance should go in opposing indirect aggression by the dictatorships against a Baltic nation bordering on the U. S. S. R. Russia wants to guard against the possibility of some coup which might permit a direct attack on Russia.

Secret Submission Reported
French quarters reported tonight that the three powers now are near agreement that any internal pact in any Baltic country—Finland, Latvia or Estonia—or political reforms of such a nature as to place any of those countries under German political domination will be regarded as indirect aggression and provide for immediate tri-power consultation.

Such consultations might result in a decision to intervene with armed strength, but this will not be automatic as the Soviet first insisted upon. On that issue, French quarters said, the Russians appear to have submitted to the British view.

For the first time in several weeks the British press has reported "substantial progress" in the negotiations at Moscow.

Seeks to Side-track Critics
The British government is known to be eager for concrete results before August 4, when Parliament is scheduled to recess, to offset widespread domestic criticisms of the terms of the preliminary agreement in formal negotiations with Tokyo over the Chinese-Japanese war and of the conversations between R. S. Hudson, secretary for overseas trade, and Dr. Helmut Wohltat, German economic official.

In the House of Commons Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exchequer, revealed Great Britain has offered Poland an additional $40,000,000 in export credits for the purchase of war materials.

Britain already has authorized a $25,000,000 loan to Poland for defense purposes. An agreement is expected to be reached shortly over coming Poland's objections to spending the British loans in England.

Prime Minister Chamberlain today pushed plans for adjournment of Parliament ten days hence to spite a growing demand that it remain to watch foreign policy.

London, July 25 (AP)—The Royal Air Force was reported today to be keeping a "keen watch" on England's east coast following the appearance in recent weeks of German military aircraft which may have crossed the English coast line.

Guest Violinist Ossy Renardy Confesses Love of Gang Films

Ossy Renardy, 18-year-old virtuoso of the violin, will be guest soloist at tonight's "Sunset Symphony"

Here for Watergate Concert Tonight, 18-Year-Old Musician, Who Is Built Like a Quarterback, Made Debut at 13

By Scott Hart
Morris Joseph, a New York banker, Ossy knew Joseph through an acquaintance. He liked this violinist better than the Strad he previously had been loaned. The tone?

Ossy stood up, drawing the bow, and his eyes lit the world. "I like the good gangster movies," said Ossy. "But some of them are very dull."

"I like the good gangster movies," said Ossy. "But some of them are very dull." "He likes football, but can't play," said Pashkus.

"Yes," Ossy was saying to a question. "My father and mother still in Vienna. I am the only child."

"We have taken out our papers," said Pashkus. "I will bring them here, my parents," said Ossy.

The symphony's agent introduced a press release: "Ossy Renardy, nee Oskar Reiss, is the only child of Adolf Reiss, formerly a waiter and Rosa, formerly a laundress, who are often mistaken for his grandparents." Reiss, born in Hungary, was 32, and Mrs. Reiss, a native Bohemian, was 47, when Ossy was born.

"He will play the Paganini Concerto in D Major," said Pashkus. "He is regarded as one of the greatest interpreters." And for the encores? Pashkus was asked.

Pashkus only smiled as if something must be held back—there must be some showmanship.

Norman MacMillan, the Daily Mail's air correspondent.

The German machines apparently have been engaged either on "specific exercises or normal routine training flights," Capt. MacMillan wrote.

He added that they had been noted particularly in the vicinity of the Thames and Humber River estuaries "on a number of occasions in the past few weeks."

It was pointed out that there was nothing in international law to prevent foreign military aircraft from carrying out exercises up to the 3-mile limit off the coast.

But, MacMillan asserted, "there is evidence, however, that certain German planes, flying at great heights, either singly or in groups of three, have actually crossed the English coastline."

"It is possible, of course," MacMillan said, "that faulty navigation by the German pilots is the explanation." In any event, he added, the planes had been "spotted by the R. A. F."

MacMillan said the German craft were first reported over the United Kingdom's territorial waters before Britain's first mass training flights to France July 14, so "there can, therefore, be no connection between these flights and the long-distance training flights of the R. A. F. over France."

Britain flapped her wings over Europe today in her third impressive show of aerial strength as 240 Royal Air Force heavy and medium bombing planes staged the greatest mass flight in the history of British aviation.

The air ministry estimated that between 1,100 and 1,200 officers and men took part in the flights.

The routes taken covered such widely separated areas as Paris, Lyons, the southeastern corner of the Bay of Biscay and the Gulf of Lyons.

Throughout the journey over France the British planes were "intercepted" by French fighters and reconnaissance craft.

Russian Sub Sunk in Games, Sets Two U.S. Speed Records

Craft Collided in Very Deep Water, Hitler's Paper Says

By the Associated Press
Berlin, July 25.—The fifth submarine disaster of the year was reported today by the newspaper Voelksischer Beobachter (Fuehrer Hitler's personal paper), which said a Soviet Russian ship had sunk off Murmansk in the Arctic Ocean with 34 men aboard.

The report, which was not corroborated from any other source, said the submarine had collided with another ship in naval maneuvers and gone down in deep water where the death and a rough sea made rescue extremely difficult.

The newspaper, however, said a diver had been able to make contact with those inside by pounding on the submarine's hull. The fleet maneuvers were immediately halted. Murmansk is in northwestern Russia, 300 miles north of the Arctic Circle.

Voelksischer Beobachter's account was under a Moscow dateline and was based on "reports from Murmansk."

If true, the disaster was the fifth of the year beginning with the loss of the Japanese submarine I-63 on February 2 when 81 men went to their deaths.

The United States submarine Squalus sank with a loss of 26 lives on May 23, the British submarine Bletis went down on June 1, with 99 men still in her hull, and the French submarine Phenix sank off Cam-Ranh Bay, French Indo-China, on June 13, with 63 men aboard.

The accident was reported while Soviet naval officials were boasting of their newly-built naval strength. Admiral Nikolai Kuznetsov, in a speech Tuesday, declared Russia had more submarines than any other country in the world. Warning Japan, he asserted the Soviet had more submarines than Germany and Japan combined.

Jane's, authoritative publication on world naval strength, credits Soviet Russia with 134 submarines built and 30 building. Japan is reported to have 84 built and 12 building, and Germany 39 built.

U. S. Ratifies Pact to Pay More Canal Rent, Consult With Panama in Steps for Defense

A new basic contract governing the Panama Canal was established yesterday as the Senate ratified a treaty negotiated three years ago with the Republic of Panama as a part of the Administration's "good neighbor" policy.

The pact revises the original 1903 treaty in many respects, increasing the annual rental of the Panama Canal, and requiring that the Latin-American state be consulted in matters concerning the defense of the canal. Heretofore the United States has had the right to move troops into Panama if necessary, without consulting its government.

Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, led a fight against ratification, charging the consultation proviso might weaken this Nation's ability to defend the canal. The vote was 65 to 18, a two-thirds majority being necessary for ratification.

Proponents of the treaty argued that the interests of hemisphere defense would be advanced by making Panama a partner in the defense of the canal.

From New York, the Associated Press said refunding agents for the Republic of Panama had announced a plan to clear defaults on $15,000,000 worth of bonds held in the United States, on which interest of $3,500,000 has accumulated.

Under the new treaty, Panama will receive an annual rental of $450,000—the equivalent in currency of $250,000 in gold, which was the rate under the old pact. Panama has refused to accept rental checks for $250,000 in devalued American dollars since the United States went off the gold standard.

Since the payments are to be made retroactive to 1934, Panama will receive a lump sum of $2,580,000.

Two other Administration efforts for strengthening defenses moved forward. President Roosevelt asked Congress to take steps to conserve the Nation's oil supply in the interests of national defense. Writing to Chairman Lea of the House Interstate Commerce Committee he asked the group to consider legislation providing a national policy on oil conservation. He suggested that a sub-committee might consider the problem of a co-ordinated program against waste in oil production this fall, so that legislation may be passed next year.

The House Military Committee gave approval to a bill permitting plane contracts to be awarded to the three lowest bidders in a procurement competition, instead of to the lowest as now provided.

U. S., Business Join to Boost Domestic Trade

'United Front' Seeking Methods, Commerce Official Reveals

A "united front for recovery" has been formed between business and governmental leaders to foster internal commercial activity and trade with Latin America. Undersecretary of Commerce Edward J. Noble revealed yesterday.

Studies of business needs are under way and precise recommendations for aiding commercial enterprise are being sought by the group, he said.

Among problems under consideration are barriers to trade between States, regional financing of local industries, low-cost housing and modernization of building trades codes and wartime industrial mobilization, he declared.

Bureau Looking Homeward

Pointing out that the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the past has devoted 80 per cent of its efforts to aiding American international trade, the Undersecretary said re-orientation of the agency's activities to increase its work for domestic business is already in process.

He added the Commerce department in general has "plenty of fact-finding services but is pretty short on its interpretative staff."

In the field of foreign trade, Noble asserted, the main problem was "finding out exactly what additional imports the United States is able to take."

Export Bank in Touch

After remarking that the trade agreements were a "great help" and that potential markets for United States products lay in Latin America, he stated that payment for additional exports could only be obtained by increasing imports.

Close co-operation between the Export-Import Bank and the State Department is being maintained, he said, to aid in solving the difficulty.

Concerning foreign trade, the Commerce Department said, meanwhile, that the United States sold $239,894,000 more merchandise abroad in the first half of the year than it purchased from foreigners.

The export excess, however, was only about half the size of the unusually large excess piled up in the same period last year.

Exports in the first half of 1939 totaled $1,415,427,000, and imports $1,094,563,000. In the same months last year, exports amounted to $1,590,788,000, and imports $980,955,000.

Farm Shipments Off

The department attributed the decline in exports partly to lower commodity prices, but primarily to decreased volume shipments of cotton, wheat and corn.

Cotton exports of 752,287,000 pounds in the six months were only about half of the average for the same months in the last ten years. Wheat exports, totaling 47,963,000 bushels, and corn exports, amounting to 16,677,000 bushels, compared with comparable figures last year of 50,327,000 bushels of wheat and 97,614,000 bushels of corn.

These figures formed part of the background for the forthcoming cotton export subsidy and other efforts to promote foreign sale of American grains.

The gain in merchandise imports spread over virtually all types of commodities except whiskey.

State Department Changes

Meanwhile, it was learned at the State Department that a reorganization of the foreign service within the next six months is contemplated.

The move has been made essential by the recent transfer of 114 commercial and agricultural attaches to the service, officials said. The attaches will be continued at

Franciscan Custos of Holy Land Arrives Reticent on Strife

The Most Rev. Albert Gori (center), custos of the Holy Land for the Franciscan Order, with Mgr. Joseph M. Corrigan (left), rector of Catholic University, and the Very Rev. Leonard Walsh, O. F. M., commissary of the Holy Land.

The Most Rev. Albert Gori, Who Has Charge of 60 Monasteries, Is Celebrating 25th Anniversary of His Ordination

"No, no, no, no... No politics!" That was the only comment upon the present conflict in Palestine that could be elicited from the heavy-set, red-bearded Franciscan friar, the Most Rev. Albert Gori, O. F. M., custos of the Holy Land for the Franciscan Order, who arrived here yesterday.

Speaking furiously in Italian to his interpreter, the Rev. Theo Belorini, who came with him from Palestine, the custos, who speaks little English himself, insisted he must maintain a rigorous impartiality toward political issues in the Holy Land.

The custos, who is in charge of 60 monasteries in Palestine, Syria, Cyprus, Turkey, Italy and the United States, is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination. He commemorated the silver jubilee at the Franciscan Monastery Chapel yesterday morning with a solemn high mass.

The Mount St. Sepulchre Monastery, 1400 Quincy street northeast, at which he is staying here for five days, is his authority. Twenty of his friars are serving in the Holy Land at the present time. The 60 monasteries contain a total of 450 monks.

Father Gori, who refused emphatically to discuss even the attitudes of the Arab and Jewish population in Palestine, became quite amiable when asked to talk of the work carried on by his order.

The friars are concerned mainly with the care of the holy places in Palestine. They have recovered, preserved and rebuilt from ruins a large number of shrines and at present are reconstructing the Sanctuary of the Visitation in Ain Karim.

Bureau Without Head

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, without a director since February 1, faces another six-month period without a formally appointed head, unless a director is chosen within the next two or three days, in time for Senate confirmation before its expected adjournment a week hence.

It was disclosed yesterday that Edgar W. Smith, of New York City, General Motors Export Co. vice president, would probably be unable to accept an offer to head the bureau.

Anyone chosen while Congress is absent would be obliged to serve without pay and would not have a clear definition of authority, officials declared.

U. S. Orders More Agents To Louisiana

Has 'Scores of Leads' in WPA, Mail, Tax and Oil Cases, Says Justice Aide

By the Associated Press

O. John Rogge, head of the criminal division of the Justice Department, disclosed yesterday he was rushing an augmented staff of investigators to Louisiana to follow up many "leads" concerning possible violations of laws pertaining to WPA, mail fraud, income taxes and "hot oil."

The attorney told an impromptu press conference he had just completed a flying trip from Louisiana to Washington to lay details of the situation before Attorney General Murphy and to draft new lawyers, experts and investigators to speed up the Government's activities.

[At Baton Rouge, dispatches reported, the Parish grand jury last night indicted L. P. Abernathy, resigned chairman of the State highway commission; A. K. Kilpatrick, of Monroe, his business partner, and Dr. James Monroe Smith, former president of Louisiana State University who already faced more than a score of Federal and State charges.

(There were 11 indictments in the report. The first, naming Abernathy and Kilpatrick, charged an offense involving $9,231—Abernathy for receiving benefit from a contract between Louisiana State University and the Standard Office Supply Co., and Kilpatrick for aiding and abetting him. Abernathy was a member of the L. S. U. board of supervisors under which Smith served. The other indictments against Abernathy and Kilpatrick charged the same offenses but on different dates and for different amounts.)

[Tonight's indictments charging Smith with embezzlement of $100,000 from the City National Bank of Baton Rouge, apparently was returned to correct a technicality in a earlier indictment.—Editors note.]

Questioned about his decision to reinforce the legal and investigative staff now at work in Louisiana, Rogge said he had received "scores" of leads. He declared he did not know whether these would pave the way to new indictments.

When asked to comment specifically on development of the Federal cases, Rogge merely said, "Where there is smoke, there is fire."

"We Mean Business"

"We mean business down there. We are bringing the best men. We wouldn't be going to all that trouble if the Attorney General and I didn't mean business," he said.

"We are following out all leads as to possible violations of Federal statutes," he emphasized. Attorney General Murphy's pledge of last week that the investigation would be pressed without favor despite any possible relationship between those under investigation and persons in the Federal Government.

"It isn't going to make out bit of difference—even if the trail should lead to the Department of Justice," Rogge said.

His remark concerning "hot oil" leads recalled that the Government already has launched an investigation of Louisiana's oil industry—the fourth largest of any State.

At the same time the Commissioners designated Twining square, from Pennsylvania avenue southeast, to the first alley, for southbound traffic only.

Gunmen Slay Music Expert By Mistake

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, July 25.—Irving Penn, 42-year-old executive of a music publishing firm, was shot to death this morning by an unidentified gunman in what detectives decided was "murder by mistake."

Penn was passing Trinity Lutheran Church when a sedan, which had been parked across the street, headed west, made a U-turn and drew up beside him.

Two men were in it, according to Harry Lang, who saw the shooting. One of them got out on the running board and fired five or six shots from a revolver, then the car sped away.

Five Bullets Struck Him

Penn was a man of peculiar stature, being 5 feet 5 inches tall and weighing 280 pounds. Five bullets struck him. As Lang rushed up to him he was muttering, "Get me a doctor; I'm hurt." Taken by ambulance to Fordham Hospital, Penn was questioned by detectives in moments of consciousness.

According to police he told them he knew no reason for anyone to shoot him and said he had no enemies.

The police learned that Penn lived with his wife, Mrs. Jane Penn, and two daughters, in a modest flat. He had been employed by the music firm for 22 years, rising from office boy to head the department of publication and royalties.

Death Car Was Stolen

Mrs. Penn and three fellow employees were among those questioned. All said the slain man was a home-loving person who rarely went out evenings and who was well liked by people among whom he worked. The automobile, said by police to have been stolen, in which the gunman rode, was found soon after the shooting, not far away. In the car was a .32-caliber Colt revolver holding six discharged shells. Under the automobile was a .32-caliber pistol, fully loaded, wrapped in a newspaper.

'Mercenary' Wife Denied Support

Pittsburgh, July 25 (AP)—Three judges who ruled Mrs. Grace Latus Cochran, 28, married her husband with "mercenary intentions" today denied her plea for a support order.

Reed Cochran, 41, whose parents left him $200,000 in trust, and Miss Latus were married a year ago at Cumberland, Md., but never lived together, it was testified.

Mrs. Cochran had asked permission to live with her husband and at the same time receive support.

A Police Hunt Brunette, 2 Men in 2d Kidnaping

Alexandria Boy Tied To Tree Near Falmouth
After Trio Took $27

Virginia State authorities and Alexandria police joined forces last night in a search for two young men and a brunette girl whose partnership in robbery and abduction has operated successfully over a large section of Virginia and who are believed headed for expansion into Maryland.

The latest victim was Roy Allyn, 19-year-old Virginia Polytechnic Institute junior, whom they abducted from his summertime job at an Alexandria filling station last night and robbed of $27 and abandoned tied to a tree along a deserted road 70 miles from the city.

During the ride, Allyn said, the trio talked about a filling station between Washington and Frederick, Md., that looked like a "good" prospect for a holdup. The driver of the car, Allyn related, promised to pay the place a visit as the three discussed plans of driving to the New York World's Fair.

Told to "Come Along"
Allyn, who lives with a widowed mother, Mrs. Hazel Allyn, East Maple street, was working alone in the Springfield gas station on the Washington-Richmond highway near Hunting Creek, when a machine drove up at 10:30 Monday night.

The holdup occupants of the car staged so resembled tactics used by three men and a girl in a Richmond robbery last week that authorities believe the trio to be the same.

Two men got out of the car, covered Allyn with a pistol and ordered him to "come along with us." Forced to lie on the car floor with an armed bandit guarding him, Allyn said he was driven a "long time" before the car came to a halt on a lonely stretch of road and the driver got out and covered the license plates with rags.

Then he was taken to a tree and bound with new rope. Fifteen minutes after the bandits' stay, Allyn said he had worked himself free to discover that he was near Morrisville, on the Falmouth-Warrenton road, 20 miles from Falmouth.

Girl Quiet on Ride
After a 5-mile walk, a motorist gave him a ride into Frederickburg, 25 miles away, where Allyn reported his adventure to authorities. Alexandria police were notified of the crime at 4:10 a. m. Allyn said that throughout the journey the girl, who appeared to be about 20 years old and whose description tallied closely with that of the brunette companion of the Richmond robbers, was silent. She sat in the front seat with the driver, he said.

One of the bandits, however, was talkative. He spoke of having served a sentence in a penitentiary and of his expectation of staying in the "holdup business until Christmas." It was he, Allyn related, who revealed the trio's plan to have a whirl at the fair.

Allyn described the men as being about 20 and 30 years old. Other than such details of their description as Allyn was able to give them, authorities hoped to establish the identity of the bandits from fingerprints believed to have been left on soft drink bottles they "guzzled" at the gas station.

Melvin Cole, 17, Richmond gas station attendant, was believed to have been the trio's first victim. He was robbed and left tied along a lonely road last Thursday.

10-Fold Increase In Household Centers Asked

Asking for $10,000,000 which would increase 100 WPA household training demonstration centers to 1,000, Edgar B. Brown, president of the United Government Employees yesterday voiced the demands of colored Federal workers in a 10-point program presented to Col. F. C. Harrington.

The U. G. E., which adopted a non-strike policy during the WPA walkouts, believes the expansion would result in the training of 100,000 women now on relief rolls for ultimate jobs in private and institutional service.

Further items list enrollment in CCC camps for young men whose families are no longer deriving income from WPA; blanketing in to the National Youth Administration of young men and women who are dependents of former WPA workers; repeal of the 30-day furlough; recertification of those dropped and establishment of self-help co-operative colonies near towns and cities for those dropped.

Human Judgment Blamed for 89% Of Traffic Deaths

Eighty-nine per cent of 1938's traffic fatalities resulted from failure of human judgment, according to a National Safety Council survey released yesterday in Chicago. Only 7 per cent of the fatal crashes were attributed to mechanical defects in automobiles. Four per cent were ascribed to highway defects.

Nineteen per cent of all drivers involved in fatal accidents were speeding, the council figures show. Driving on the wrong side of the road accounted for 8 per cent of the toll and violation of right-of-way at intersections for 5 per cent.

"The pedestrian is far from blameless," the council reports. "In more than two-thirds of all fatal pedestrian accidents in 1938 the pedestrian either was violating a traffic law or acting unsafely."

Chief sources of danger to pedestrians, according to the survey, are use of rural highways as sidewalks and jaywalking in cities.

News of Capital Night Clubs

HATS OFF TO THE BROWN DERBY! The town's premier night factory, the Brown Derby, will reopen for the fall Friday. Big Al Simmonds will again be at the amusement helm and his right bower, George Berg, will again dish out the pianistics.

Screwball fun is the Brown Derby's specialty, and they're proud of it. They have a right to be. For the B. D. has always been a favorite gathering spot for those carefree souls who prefer their good times highly seasoned with insanity. We can't get Al down to earth about where he's been all summer. He says that he and George have been on a vaudeville tour. But there's vaudeville wherever Al and George park. P. S. Al was married to a charming lady last Thursday. Now, does that sound like vaudeville?

RIVIERA TO BE ENLARGED! There's talk about enlarging the Lounge Riviera this fall. The room can be easily extended into the main dining room of Hotel 2400 Sixteenth Street. Quite a number of week-end patrons at Riviera have had to sit in the dining room lately and go back and forth for dancing. So it looks as though the enlargement may be in order.

DEATH DEFYING FEATS are thrilling Shoreham Terrace crowds. Conjuror Paul Duke swallows a couple of dozen razor blades (sharp ones, too), then pulls them all neatly threaded on a string. Capt. (Speed) Phoenix leaps from a 120-foot tower into an incredibly small net. It must look like a postage stamp to him from his perch on the tower. The wind was blowing a gale Monday night and everyone breathed a sigh of relief when the captain landed all in one piece.

Special Dancers Gary Leon and Tui Mace will star on the Terrace next week. We don't know that the Shoreham management will appreciate our telling this, but we think you should know that Gary's the lad whose co-responder technique made "come along with us" a really diverting reading in Rudy Valle's divorce case.

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN. Rainbow Room's Milton Davis went out to Maryland Gardens last Sunday just to hear Harold Vee and orchestra. In honor of Milton, Harold was really giving his violin what-for when, ker-snap! the end of the fiddle pulled off and all the strings flew right up in Senator Vee's glasses. "Dart the luck!" said Harold. "Tee-hee!" snickered everyone else.

TAHITI INTO HOUR GLASS. That Tahitian war chant being done by the Cocomos at Hour Glass is the most unusual number you'll hear right up in Senator Vee's glasses. "Dart the luck!" said Harold. "Tee-hee!" snickered everyone else.

hospital, to assure them of his safety. "I'm all right, mama," he told his mother, nearly hysterical with joy.

Mother Sets Out for Camp
"I love you" was all the father was able to say, and the mother set out at once for the camp, 8 miles from the Millinocket-Houlton highway. The father, suffering an eye injury received during the hunt, was unable to leave.

The worst of the boy's injuries was a hip sore apparently suffered in a fall. His body bore many deep scratches and he was badly bitten by mosquitoes and flies.

He had subsisted on berries, the boy told McMoran. A physician said his condition was "fair" and that he would recover.

Made Use of Scout Lore
Young Fendler told McMoran he had followed mountain streams in the belief they would lead him to human habitation. He made full use, he explained, of the nature lore he had learned as a Boy Scout.

His clothes had been torn from his body by the brush and rocks. The slender youth became lost Monday afternoon last week when he went ahead of his father and some other companions in starting descent of the rugged mountain.

A few minutes later, just before a hail storm swept the summit, his companions rushed to overtake him but did not find him.

Several times searchers picked up what they thought was his trail, but each time bloodhounds were unable to follow the clues.

REMARKABLE PEOPLE. Manager Huey Liang, of Bamboo Gardens, whose splendid barytoning of "One Alone" from "The Desert Song," gives the final touch of satisfaction to his rollicking new "Dance Cocktails" revue. Mr. Liang is going to sing a Chinese song, and in Chinese robes, next week, he promises.

Singer Penny Ford, of the Metronome Room, can memorize the lyrics of any song in five minutes, never carries a script to the bandstand. What's better, if she forgets a word or two, she can ad lib so cleverly you'd never know it.

Jack Manning, of the Hi-Hat, after finishing his first week at Hat and playing approximately 375 numbers, has not been "stumped" on a single request number.

Jole, of Mayfair, is both a fine musician and fashion expert. She's now concocting a new frock and hat of brown jersey, with touches of rose that's the latest in high style.

their hunt for 6-year-old Russell Jensen, missing in the dense Paul Bunyan State forest since yesterday.

The child disappeared after following his father, Curtis, and his uncle, the Rev. Roy Olson, of Minneapolis, to the beach of Lake Kabeekona, where they were fishing. He was last seen walking along the beach and his tracks led into the woods.

Treacherous swamps in which the boy could easily lose his life dot the forest. Besides lack of food and possible inability to find water, the boy's endurance would be further weakened by the swarms of mosquitoes which plague woodmen at night.

Pastor Freed, Tells Of Arab Kidnaping

father at the Jerusalem Y. M. C. A. Father and son embraced with tears of joy.

"Gee, pops, I'm glad to see you, pops," cried the young minister. The son was immediately taken to a private room and given warm food in an effort to ease his stomach pains.

He ripped off grimy clothing, supplied by his Arab captors, took a shower and shaved, all the while talking lively to his father and his friend, the Rev. Clifford Moore, of Akron, of being hidden in a dry well in the desert.

While Goldner talked a physician completed his medical examination and announced his condition good except for exhaustion, diarrhea and bites from sheepsheads while in captivity.

Goldner related that he left the gang's latest hiding place near Hebron shortly after noon, after he and his captors had kissed each other on both cheeks and had sworn "eternal friendship."

Thought End Was Near

Goldner said the captors "treated me fine, but there was once or twice when things came to a close shave, and I thought the end was near. . . I tried by best to keep up my spirits by singing songs, learning Arabic, playing cards and other games with my captors."

However, he said, the Arabs were anxious about his welfare, and when they parted the rebel leader returned his gold watch and other effects taken from him at the kidnaping. The leader explained he understood the watch was a present from Goldner's wife, and therefore highly valued.

The pastor said he had pledged his word not to reveal his captors' identities. He said he was ignorant of his whereabouts throughout his captivity. Although he sometimes saw the lights of villages, his captors never took him close.

After receiving congratulations from United States Consul Wadsworth, Goldner was put to bed for his first night of uninterrupted rest since his journey to Mar Saba on the Dead Sea which ended in his capture July 14.

The physician refused to allow him to be disturbed for an official statement when police arrived shortly after he went to sleep.

"I am speechless with joy and happiness," said the elder Goldner, 67, who was taken captive with his son but released two days later to arrange a ransom. "My prayers and those of thousands of friends have been answered. My indebtedness to Wadsworth, Miller (A. L. Miller, Y. M. C. A. secretary), and many friends will be impossible to re-

Conferees Modify Retirement Bill

Civil Service Workers Win Fight Against Larger Contributions

Major provisions of the Neely-Ramspeck bill designed to liberalize the civil service retirement act were stripped from the legislation by Senate and House conferees yesterday after which an agreement was reached on three minor amendments.

Representative Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, stated that the provisions lowering optional retirement ages were scrapped because of the refusal of the Government employee spokesmen to accept a larger employee contribution to the retirement fund.

The House bill had proposed that the employee contribution be raised to 5 per cent, while the Senate measure provided for a 4 per cent mandatory payment.

Additional Payments Afforded
While the required contribution will remain at 3 1/2 per cent, as the present law provides, one of the amendments agreed to will allow employees to make voluntary additional payments to the retirement fund up to 10 per cent of their salaries in order to increase their annuities. The payments must be in multiples of $25.

Retirement ages are left unchanged as a result of the failure of the conferees to agree on the retirement payments. They are now 62, 65 and 70 for compulsory retirement, and 60, 63 and 68 for optional retirement.

Other benefits retained in the Neely-Ramspeck bill allow greater laxity in the collection of annuities and provide for joint survivorship if the employee elects to hold back part of his pension for an heir.

The length of time which a disabled employee may remain on the retirement roll after recovery is increased from 90 days to 1 year under another provision of the legislation.

Government Groups Divided
Spokesmen for Government groups were divided last night in their reactions to the compromise measure.

Robert H. Alcorn, of the Joint Conference on Retirement, said that while the conference report was not all that could be wished, it does propose definite improvements in the retirement act.

Charles I. Stenge, of the American Federation of Government Employees, who was adamant in his opposition to the increased employee contribution, expressed the view that the major objectives of the legislation had been lost.

Representative Ramspeck, after the conference, stated he was "doing everything in my power" to get House leaders to permit a vote on his bill to extend the civil service system to all Federal employees, including thousands of New Deal appointees.

Anyone over 18 years old may participate in the auditions at 7:30 p. m. Tuesdays at the W. B. C. studios. Performers are paid $5 for their appearance on this program.

The measure has been reported out by the House Civil Service Committee, and several weeks ago was given a special rule by the Rules Committee. Since then House leaders have made no effort to give it the right of way.

Ramspeck expressed the view that passage of the merit system extension bill is a logical step to follow enactment of the Hatch measure prohibiting Government employees from participating in politics.

Should the bill reach the floor, however, an attack will be made on it by the Republicans who in committee fought unsuccessfully for competitive examinations.

As now written, the Ramspeck bill requires that all employees taken into the civil service pass non-competitive tests within six months or be dismissed from the service.

Price Set for Silver Mined Before July 1

President Roosevelt proclaimed yesterday a 64.64-cent-an-ounce price for an estimated 2,000,000 ounces of domestic silver mined but not delivered to the Government prior to the expiration of that price June 30.

Technicalities in the drafting of the hotly contested monetary bill left the Treasury with no special price for silver mined in this country before the old 64.64-cent price expired but not offered for sale to the Treasury until later. The law made no provision at all for silver mined in this country on July 1.

Without the President's proclamation, officials said, the Treasury could have paid no more for this American silver than it pays for foreign silver, 35 cents an ounce.

The new law fixed a 71.11 cent-an-ounce price for silver mined after July 1.

Rare and Fierce Rabbit Fish Gnashes Teeth As Captor Hooks Him at Chesapeake Beach

A prickly, black and white rabbit fish, rarely hooked in Atlantic waters, nestled in a Washington icebox yesterday while its captor, Willard Sibert, of 2032 Otis street northeast, continued to wonder how he ever caught such a queer-looking thing.

Sibert said he caught the "rabbit" about half a mile out from the pier at Chesapeake Beach Sunday, while fishing with John E. Walters, of 1734 Seventeenth street northwest.

At first look, Sibert said, he thought the fish might be a small porpoise. Then he saw the pointed jaws, sharp "rabbit teeth" and large eyes, and gave up trying to decide what it was. In the midst of some debate over whether "the fish will eat us up," Sibert pulled it into the boat.

About 20 inches long, black on top with a white belly, the "rabbit" lay in the bottom, "gritting its teeth" for about 10 minutes. Then it puffed up a couple of times, and died.

In Chesapeake Beach, veteran fishermen admitted they had never seen anything like it, then debated whether it might be a hybrid of mackerel and blowfish, or salmon and puffer.

Sibert brought the fish back to Washington, and the Bureau of Fisheries identified it as a rabbit fish, the largest of the American puffers, rarely found in the Atlantic north of Cape Hatteras. Sibert said officials had told him it was the first time they had heard of a rabbit fish being caught on a hook.

The fish bit through one hook on Sibert's line, but the second snagged in his upper lip, where its teeth could not reach it.

A retired Marine with 31 years in the service, Sibert is now employed at the Riggs Bank. He said this was the first season he had ever fished. With the problem of naming the fish out of the way, Sibert last night faced another dilemma. Even on a cake of ice, he decided, the fish would not keep much longer. The Smithsonian said they had one specimen, caught in a net, and did not need another. A taxidermist's fee for mounting would be $25.

The Bureau of Fisheries' report said that the rabbit fish was considered poisonous. Sibert debated whether to wait another day for someone who might want the fish, or just to bury it.

Senor Quezon's Choice

In refusing to seek re-election, which would necessitate amendment of the Philippine Commonwealth's constitution, President Manuel Quezon has taken a statesmanlike attitude.

Senor Quezon has been a popular President. As the most effective leader of the independence movement, he occupies with respect to his country a position that may be compared with that of George Washington in the history of the United States. Probably a majority of Filipinos would like to see him remain in the executive mansion at Manila. But Senor Quezon is apparently determined to put principle above expediency and personal ambition in the interest of future stability of the Commonwealth.

The Filipinos' constitutional convention decided that Presidents of the Commonwealth should serve six years without the privilege of re-election. Undoubtedly its purpose in imposing this restriction on the chief executive was to discourage any tendency toward dictatorship. Members of the convention were aware of the fact that many promising democracies, particularly in South America, have been wrecked by the ambitions of their Presidents to cling indefinitely to their posts.

Arbitrary rule has arisen out of these situations so frequently that Senor Quezon would have automatically exposed himself to the charge of dictatorship by seeking a second term. Moreover, he realizes that an amendment to the Commonwealth constitution, sweeping away a desirable safeguard only six years after the adoption of that charter, would inevitably weaken the new government at Manila. Probably that was the dominant factor influencing his decision. By choosing to step aside at the end of his constitutional term President Quezon has greatly enhanced his right to be called the George Washington of the Philippines. And the fact that he has chosen to follow the United States tradition, instead of that prevalent in many Spanish-speaking countries, is a hopeful augury for the continued success of the Commonwealth government.

Funds For The USHA

It is unfortunate that the bill to extend the borrowing and lending powers of the United States Housing Authority should have become a tail to the Administration's latest business-lifting kite. Public housing to replace the slums is an end in itself. It cannot be properly thrown into the category of pump-priming ventures. Regardless of what may be the outcome of the Administration's so-called spending-lending bill, the House ought to consider the proposed extension of USHA funds on its own merits.

When the House Rules Committee deferred action on this measure, there was no definite indication that its enactment at this session will be blocked. But the measure has met with considerable opposition. A large number of legislators are dissatisfied with some provisions as they now stand. Since there is no intelligent opposition to demolition of the slums, it must be assumed that the chief weakness of the bill is the expenditures it would entail during the next 60 years.

The Post has pointed out on a number of occasions that the subsidies paid by the USHA are excessive. The slum-clearance program could be carried out satisfactorily with a much smaller outlay of Federal funds, by the simple device of letting tenants pay a larger portion of the cost of the new facilities they will enjoy. Congress would be thoroughly justified in directing the USHA to reduce its subsidies. But it would be a major mistake to arrest the work of redeveloping urban residential areas that have fallen into decay.

Defeat of the bill would solve no problem. It is true that it would reduce the strain on the Treasury somewhat, but that can be accomplished in considerable measure without destroying this hopeful program. Congress would put itself in a ridiculous light if it should block an undertaking of such far-reaching social as well as economic importance, while sanctioning new spending proposals of far more questionable character.

Two reasonable courses are open to the House. It can amend the bill so as to trim down subsidies and let the program go forward on that basis. Or it can pass the bill in its present form and adopt the suggestion of the Washington Housing Association that a national committee of outstanding citizens be appointed to study the housing problem anew with the object of developing a long-range policy, impervious to reasonable criticism.

Japan's Double Triumph

There is nothing encouraging in the immediate aftermath of the Anglo-Japanese agreement, recognizing the "special requirements" of the invader's armies of occupation in China. Even as the text of the accord was being read to Parliament by Prime Minister Chamberlain the Japanese military were acting to increase pressure on the British. Closing of the Pearl River, cutting off all shipping between Hongkong and Canton, is a particularly serious blow to a crown colony which depends for its very existence on uninterrupted trade with the Chinese hinterland.

The Japanese, in other words, are acting promptly to make dominant their own interpretation of an intentionally vague and indefinite accord. It may be argued that the Craigie-Arita formula does not constitute a recognition of belligerent rights for Japan in China. But the lack of precision in the wording is not going to discourage the Japanese from defining at their own sweet will what is involved in "safeguarding their own security and maintaining public order in the regions under their control."

Moreover, there is no reason to expect that the British, having accepted the insertion of this wedge, will be able to protest effectively as the Japanese drive it home. Tokyo may deem it good policy to move slowly in making life intolerable for British merchants in Shanghai and the other treaty ports. It may be some time before direct strangulation is exerted on Hongkong. But whether or not the time for this is already ripe for protest effectively as the Japanese drive it home. Tokyo may deem it good policy to move slowly in making life intolerable for British merchants in Shanghai and the other treaty ports. It may be some time before direct strangulation is exerted on Hongkong. But whether or not the time for this is already ripe for protest effectively as the Japanese drive it home.

If the outlook in China is black for the British it is scarcely less so for American interests, whether commercial, educational or religious, in that country. It is all very well for officials to indicate that the United States would not think of following the British lead in acknowledging Japan's "special requirements" in China. But the somber fact is that if the British are pushed out Americans will be forced to withdraw almost simultaneously. The Japanese, taking one potential enemy at a time, have not yet really turned the heat on our people in China. Very few of them will rely on this reprieve as a guarantee of security.

Therefore it is difficult to make sense out of the statement of Senator Hiram Johnson that if the United States had cooperated with the British in behalf of mutual interests in China "we would have been left holding the bag." And the mystery of the Senator's reasoning is not clarified by his adjuration to Americans to "thank God they have a Congress that hasn't made the mistake thus far of intervening in the present affair in China or of being the ally of anyone."

The present collapse of British prestige and influence in the Far East very materially affects the United States, as time will not be slow in showing. It leaves American merchants, teachers and missionaries, in China with our Government's blessing, in a most exposed and unenviable position. In this debacle nobody gains except Japan and her totalitarian allies.

But the gain for Japan is enormous. While Great Britain grants that country what amounts to full belligerent rights the United States continues to treat it as a peaceful power. Under our extraordinary neutrality laws Japan may continue to purchase here all the materials of war necessary to complete the destruction of China. Under the Anglo-Japanese agreement every additional conquest gives Japan encouragement further to encroach upon American interests in a friendly country with which, we pretend, Japan is wholly at peace. It is fantastic.

No District Line

Reports of a dispute between District and Virginia authorities over prosecution of James Edward Gibson on a charge of criminal assault appear to be in error. The controversy did not arise because of uncertainty as to whether the spot where the crime is alleged to have been committed is in Virginia or the District. Rather the refusal of Judge Pollard to accept jurisdiction over the case in the Federal Court was based upon his belief that Virginia is responsible for the prosecution of crimes of this sort committed on Federal property in that State.

It is only a matter of chance, however, that the issue of the "no-man's land" between the District and Virginia was not raised. Any crime on the south bank of the Potomac in its course through the District is a dilemma to law-enforcement officers. For no one knows where Virginia ends and the District begins.

The prolongation of this dispute year after year is almost incredible. Since the District covers a small area and was specially created by Congress to serve as the Nation's Capital, one would expect its boundaries to be marked with the greatest precision. On the contrary, Washington police never know just where their responsibility for law enforcement on the south shore of the river ends.

Congress should not wait for a major dispute arising in this area to move once more for a settlement. The last attempt to secure a marking of the line is now generally admitted to have been a failure. The commission appointed to do the job attempted to draw a new line instead of finding the old one. Congress properly disregarded its recommendations. But the necessity of finding the legal boundary—which is conceded to be the old high-water mark on the Virginia side of the river—is as pressing as it ever was.

Experts who have given long study to the problem believe that the best course is for Congress to authorize the Attorney General to initiate a friendly suit in the Supreme Court to determine the respective rights of Virginia and the District in this disputed area. That course would at least have the virtue of effecting a definite settlement. It is a pity that this proposal was not given serious consideration on Capitol Hill before the preadjournment rush began.

Illustrating The Point

If the House of Representatives had deliberately set out to prove that Washington needs a new system of local government, it could scarcely have demonstrated that need more effectively than it has done at the session now drawing to a close. The payroll for District employees earlier in the month, the protracted row over the tax bill, the muddle resulting from the milk investigation, the postponement of the District reorganization bill and the general handling of District affairs in the House—all cry out for a new method of governing the Nation's Capital.

As if to put a final capstone on the argument, the House on Monday provided a typical illustration of the way in which relatively minor municipal affairs are botched on Capitol Hill. Eleven bills slipped through the House by unanimous consent. Obviously few members of the House cared anything about them. It cannot be said that Congress really legislates for the District in such cases. On the contrary, it suffers bills sponsored by a few individuals to become law unless some one objects. If objection is raised, the measure is likely to be automatically defeated without much consideration of its merits or shortcomings.

The latter point was amply illustrated by the fate of the "curb-service" beer bill and the proposal to permit the suspension of drivers' permits when they are found guilty of reckless driving. In both instances these typically local matters should have been handled by a city council or commission familiar with the conditions at issue. Congress cannot be expected to dispose of such minor issues intelligently. Its failure to do so in these cases is merely the repetition of an old unhappy story.

Beer was sold on trays to persons seated in automobiles for a number of years under the present law. Recently, however, the corporation counsel concluded that it was illegal. Since the practice had proved harmless, there seems no reason why it should not be legalized. But a determined fight on the part of a few Congressmen has led to an arbitrary negative decision.

Surely District officials know best whether it is desirable to punish reckless driving in Washington by suspension of permits. Congress has no means of judging the merits of that proposed change. Yet the House permitted one of its members to block the improvement earnestly sought by the local authorities.

Even if the House can disregard the inconvenience and injustice to the local community resulting from this cumbersome ordinance-making procedure, it should be increasingly concerned over the necessity of having the National Legislature license chiropractors, regulate "chance" salesmen in the District and negotiate other minor items of municipal business. To force these trivial matters through Congress is like using a cement mixer to blend perfume.

The most encouraging thing about the operation of this unwieldy system is that the country is at last becoming aware of it. No system so utterly inefficient and arbitrary is likely to endure if the voters of the Nation come to realize that it tends to retard national legislation as well as to hamstring the Capital.

The Newark man who predicted, on the basis of a mathematical formula, that his child would be a boy is now the more or less proud father of a girl. "I missed it," he said, "but as wrong as I am, I am right." Spoken like a New Dealer.

Appearances are often deceptive. Halo hats are being worn by some of the cutest little devils imaginable.

The Golden Age

From the Chicago Daily News.

What with these thumping marches of the wooden saloonkeepers upon the city hall, and the uproar over closing hours for gin mills, we seem to have a great civic awakening in our fair city. No longer is our temple of civic virtue in a state of sista. Patriotism is rampant, and patriots are falling all over one another singing that old barrel-house anthem, "Curfew shall not ring this morning."

Nevertheless, there is something of the effete about it all. In the Augustan age of Chicago's publicans, when the mayor's picture proudly adorned every saloon license, talk about closing hours was purely academic.

What has happened to rend that ancient harmony, in these days of repeal ushered in to the gladsome strains of "Happy Days Are Here Again"? Economic determinism should operate to keep our council in step with night-club orchestras, even if they do swing it wild enough to shake the aldermanic tummy like a bowl of jelly.

Letters To The Editor

Treaty With Japan

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post has recently printed reports to the effect that the application of an embargo on the shipment of war materials to Japan would violate our 1911 "treaty of amity and commerce" with that country, and that therefore the State Department is apt to be hesitant in taking any positive stand. Whether or not these reports are in any way a reflection of the attitude of the State Department, it is unfortunate that such reports are being circulated without an indication of the nature of the whole picture.

It may be true that an embargo would violate the treaty of 1911, a treaty which Japan entered into because of the advantage which would accrue to her, and which she has held to for the same reason. Should it prove a hindrance, she would not even bother with the formality of renouncing it.

In 1921 Japan and the United States, with seven other nations, signed the Nine-Power Treaty to respect "the sovereignty, the independence and the territorial and administrative integrity" of China. Japan never respected this pledge and never intended to. The present war constitutes the most flagrant possible violation. We are a party to this violation by our furnishing of war materials for Japan's use.

Violation or abrogation of the 1911 treaty might very well hurt Japan's feelings. True, but would it constitute a vital injury to Japan? The violation of the Nine-Power Treaty by Japan and the United States constitutes a vital injury to China. Which is the greater injury?

It should be abundantly clear which direction our action in this situation should take.

Lawyer Analyzes Walter-Logan Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial regarding the way in which the Senate last week passed the Walter-Logan bill (Senate 915)—covering judicial review of decisions and rules and regulations of Federal administrative agencies—performs, I think, a distinct public service.

Considering that this bill affects directly or indirectly the rights of practically every American citizen, it has received remarkably little public attention except a relatively small group of interested lawyers.

Without even attempting to analyze the details of the bill or the relative positions of the chief advocate and opponent of the measure, the following points will indicate the nature of the dispute:

1. As approved by the American Bar Association, the chief feature of the bill, which won for it many adherents, was section 1 (d) which "authorized and requested" the Supreme Court of the United States to prescribe uniform rules of practice and procedure for the hearing of all claims and controversies between the United States, or its governmental agencies, and any person. This feature was proposed jointly by former President Vanderbilt of the American Bar Association and Edgar B. Tolman, editor of the American Bar Association Journal, who rendered singular service in the preparation of the new rules of practice and procedure for the District Courts of the United States. This provision has been dropped from the bill and was not even mentioned in the report of the Senate committee.

2. As a result of criticism by the Supreme Court in the Schechter and other cases of the non-publication of administrative rules and regulations before they become effective, one of the chief original reasons for proposing such a bill was the difficulty persons not in the Government had of finding and inspecting such rules and regulations. Congress cured this difficulty by the passage of the act requiring all administrative rules and regulations of general applicability to be published in the Federal Register.

3. In section 4 of the bill as approved by the Senate, so-called "intra-agency boards" in every department and independent establishment are set up and section 4 (b) provides that "when any person is aggrieved by a decision of any officer or employee of any agency" review of the decision by the "intra-agency board" becomes mandatory. The far-flung possibilities of this provision seem obvious.

4. The communications act of 1934, as amended, generally regarded as a model act, provides that judicial review of decisions of the Federal Communications Commission shall be limited to questions of law and that finding of fact by the commission, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it shall clearly appear, that the findings of the commission are arbitrary or capricious.

And yet, the administrative law bill, as passed by the Senate, section 5 (a), provides for judicial review of all final decisions of all administrative agencies, and further provides that the "court may affirm or set aside the decision or may direct the administrative agency or independent agency concerned to modify its decision" and that the decision of the administrative agency shall be set aside "if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court

(1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous; or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; and so forth. Thus the provision that the court shall set aside decisions of Federal administrative agencies, if it decides that the findings of fact "are clearly erroneous," would mean a very important change with respect to numerous administrative agencies and introduce an element which, to say the least, clearly was not discussed in Congress.

As drawn, the above rule would cover all administrative agencies (except the Interstate Commerce Commission and a few other exempt agencies). It would eliminate at once the distinction usually made between quasi-legislative functions (such as rate making by the Communications Commission) and quasi-judicial functions exercised by such agencies as the Federal Trade Commission.

Without entering into the controversy between Col. O. R. McGuire of the General Accounting Office, chairman of the Committee on Administrative Law of the American Bar Association, and Mortimer Riemer, secretary of the National Lawyers Guild, it would appear that the Washington Post clearly is right in urging that there should be a thorough study of this bill by the House before it is adopted.

Reply To Mr. Pegler

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please allow me to make a few observations on Westbrook Pegler's July 22 column in The Post. He stated, "The truth is that Germany and Italy are enemies of this country." That statement I seriously doubt. If he had said, "The truth is this country is the enemy of Germany and Italy," I could agree. Ever since Roosevelt's "Quarantine the aggressor nations," the New Deal has led the attack on these nations. On the other hand, their fondest wish is to acquire a peaceful and friendly understanding with the U. S. A.

Next I find this curious statement: "We are included among the weaklings because we are a democracy and as such have no right to exist, except in a subdued condition, subject to their discipline, and for their purposes." It strikes me that Mr. Pegler's faith in democracy in general and the U. S. A. in particular is small indeed.

I frankly admit that the "weak condition" of this country had entirely escaped my notice and I believe I can say, without fear of contradiction, that Hitler, Mussolini and I entertain a very healthy respect for both the actual and the potential strength of this country. His statement might have applied to us in 1776, when we had no navy and 40 per cent of the people were flamingly pro-British. Nevertheless, our hastily gathered, ragged little army sent the greatest sea power on earth packing off home to nurse its bruises.

I see also that he is worried about where Russia will stand. I will say to him that if Germany and Italy are successful in keeping Russia neutral while they seek to recover lost territory, or right old wrongs, then I will have to take my hat off to their diplomacy. In the same manner, if this country should ever be faced with war and it were able to keep a strong enemy neutral, I would immediately take off my hat to United States diplomacy.

The statement that in the World War France was invaded and not a divot was taken in Germany, seems a bit misleading in the light of history. Mr. Pegler seems to have forgotten that France declared war on Germany first, mobilized first and invaded Germany's territory first. (In Alsace-Lorraine.)

It would be well to remember also that just about the same conditions prevailed in the war of 1870-71. His entire article appears to me as one of the three steps taken so often by so many nations down through the world's history. First, a failure to settle problems by diplomacy. Second, a campaign of hate through the instruments of public opinion, and finally, war. The type of propaganda fostered by Mr. Pegler is as old as history itself.

The Post Impressionist

Orpheus Outdoors

THE WATERGATE CONCERTS are a mixture of uncommon sights and sounds to those music lovers who sprawl over the grass and the sidewalks near the viaduct on Waterside drive.

While the cash customers sit solemn and silent, those who do not pay even for a seat of padded marble step straggle up under the bridge, with click-clacking of heels, and a jabbering of tongues. Out of sight of the 85 perspiring musicians, and almost out of earshot of their music these late arrivals come, stand, or go, constantly shifting their positions. Some walk briskly up to the ticket booths, and trail away with the disappointing: "Sorry. Only dollar seats left."

Echoes of "What're they playing now?" bounce back from under the arch of the bridge, butting rudely into music.

The policeman on guard here seems absolutely drunk with the milk of human kindness. He hustles about, placing everyone in the best position to see the barge and hear the music. Sometimes, as he moves the red-lanterns and the "Road Closed" that block the view, the boards and wooden horses fall apart with a loud clatter. Finally a phalanx of men covers the wooden barricades.

Listeners are clustered on the sides of parked cars like wasps on a peach. They perch on bumpers, fenders and running boards. On the bridge above, two women begin conversing loudly in Spanish. There are furtive "sh-h-h's," and then someone in the dark near us shouts: "Hey! Up there on the bridge—shut up!" A girl, nestled between the fender and hood of an automobile, shakes herself, startled, from a reverie.

Two young women cycle to a stop at the rim of the crowd and dismount gracefully. Erect, lithe-figured, they gaze at the barge. Their faces reflect the light, and the haunting music.

An exasperated father keeps leaping from his seat on the gutterstone, chasing after a tiny son who insists on running in circles, crying shrilly, or else squatting in the center of the road.

Most of the listeners are relaxed, free of earthly thoughts; you can almost see them whenever the strings of violins throb, or harp whistles. Errol, too, goes briskly to work. In the darkness many shoulders seem magnetized by music and easily draw the heads of the opposite sex.

Occasionally the voice of the conductor is carried by the amplifiers around the corner of the bridge, but though everyone strains his ears to learn what is being announced, when the voice ceases there is the inevitable turning to one's neighbor: "What'd he say?"

Even the bridge and the river seem in repose, listening. The soft hum of automobiles pulsing over the bridge seems to punctuate each note. But soon the chattering of outboards and the lazy sputter of the motorboats break the spell. "Shut out!" shout the boats from around here on concert nights! "Somebody raps. And then, as he shakes his head in disgust, a great transport plane roars overhead, its lights trailing a giant cross against the stars.

Hemmed in by the listeners who sit or sprawl over the grass, it is still possible to hear the ship and permit the music to weave fanciful patterns in the brain. The dancing reflections of light on the Potomac also weave weird pictures.

When the concert ends, the crowd rises to its feet, applauding. Papers and blankets are folded, suits and dresses are slipped on, and the girls pat their hair self-consciously. The massed audience dribbles into fragments and groups, still applauding. We start for the barge, picking our way down and out among the emptied chairs.

Suddenly the orchestra swings into an encore, stopping us all in our tracks. And we stand there by the seawall, among the seats, seeing the barge and the musicians, hearing the music distinctly, for the first time. The light and merry air seem to be keeping with the music, candlepower Japanese lanterns bobbing from the stems of the canoes.

More applause. The conductor flicks his hips, smiles from his podium, hope down and disappears into the wings. The musicians bow, begin packing their instruments. The sea of faces on the steps breaks. Near our feet, the jam of dancers sprays down and disappears into the Potomac. In one of them a man struggles with the portable on his knees.

He jingles dials in an orchestra. Jazz jangles through the air. And we hurry away.

Civil Liberties For All

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with considerable interest and approval, the letter to your issue of July 23 of Merle D. Vincent, president of the Washington chapter, National Lawyers Guild, wherein he comments upon the 100 per cent patriotism of Westbrook Pegler, his views on communism, and the rights and civil liberties of our citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution.

Mr. Vincent stands for the Constitution and its guaranty of civil liberties for all our people—and not merely a few of them; he opposes intolerance and its evil voice and influence; and lists the objects of the National Lawyers Guild which he commends to Mr. Pegler, all of which is very good indeed so far as it goes.

But I think with equal propriety he might have named, with Mr. Pegler, the distinguished member of the American Bar Association who felt called upon recently to criticize severely certain late decisions of the Supreme Court.

I do not agree with Mr. Vincent's statement, viz: "Any good old conservative lawyer will advise Peg that the truth is a good defense to an action for libel."

Do not know that old Mansfield wrote like the Bible, says: "The more 'tis a truth, the more 'tis a libel!" W. H. GARDNER,

A Hero Of Florida

CARL FISHER, the real estate promoter who died a short time ago in Miami Beach, has been laid away under heaps of praise and anecdote which will soon wither as such gales jar and broken wheels always do. The wire frames of some of the set pieces will be salvaged and put away in the newspaper storerooms to be dragged out, dusted off and adorned with fresh posies when his contemporary in the fabulous Florida boom, George Merrick, of Coral Gables, is lowered into the sand which both men sold by the grain.

Mr. Fisher did not quite broke, but broke by comparison with the wealth which he once possessed, or thought he possessed, and Mr. Merrick, who once paid William Jennings Bryan $50,000 a season to act as Pied Piper for the sales department of Coral Gables, a few seasons ago was running a small fishing camp and serving as his own bellhop.

Navy's Montauk Visit And Reason Recalled

BOTH MEN performed miracles by private enterprise with private capital, most of it O. P. M., which a Hitler, a Mussolini or a Stalin would exploit before the world as magnificent national achievements of a chosen people. For comparison there is Tripoli, where a hotel and gambling casino and some military works are celebrated as evidence of the Duke's conquest of primitive territory, and where a few thousand exiled Italians exist in slightly modified slavery.

Neither Fisher nor Merrick ever received as much as a nod from their country, and the one great act of co-operation which Fisher wangled out of the navy was futile in the long run, for it failed to boom his development at Montauk, the tip of Long Island, where he had created in his mind a great Atlantic port which would bring Europe one whole day closer, by boat.

Fisher induced the Navy to pay a summer visit to Montauk to demonstrate the capacity of the harbor and other advantages, and, incidentally, to boom his real estate there, but the promotion was hopeless, at that time, at least, and it failed him at great loss of the money which he had won at Miami Beach. The jobs and many of the officers who dressed Mr. Fisher's real estate venture that season were indignant, not only because they were being used to dress a private enterprise but also because they found themselves far from the nearest amusement center and without transportation for liberty parties.

One Of The Great Builders Of Florida

FISHER HAD ANCHORED off Montauk in a little cruiser and had marked on maps of the great tract of treeless dunes the sites of the hotels, the yacht club, the golf course, the seaplane base and other magnificence which were to greet travelers from Europe as the ships, and, in time, the great flying boats, first made land in America. He hopped at Montauk, it is true, but his own money went with the money of his friends and others who threw in with his great idea. From that time on he was out of action, but he could put Montauk out of his mind and return to Miami Beach where, on every hand, there were substantial and beautiful reminders of his earlier triumphs.

He liked to talk of his youthful adventures as a bicycle rider when he had his choice of a $10 goldpiece, a plug hat or a shotgun for winning a race at a county fair, and of his ingenuity in laying down a razorback barage of wild pig imported from Georgia to catch the snakes and screen the crews of workmen who were clearing the tangled mangrove from the sandy strip in the beginning of Miami Beach.

Flagler had shoveled the railroad down the Florida East Coast and finally, on stilts, over the water, to the God-forsaken settlement of Key West, resorting to outright or disguised peonage to command the necessary labor under appalling conditions. He was, and remains, one of the great builders of Florida, where, incidentally, peonage has not yet vanished from the mind of Senator Claude Pepper, that enlightened statesman of the new South and political padrone of the WPA.

Veteran And Casualty Of Florida's Boom

BUT FISHER, up to the time of his death, though respected as a veteran and casualty of the great boom, had not received public recognition for the fulfillment of the dreamy ambition of that coast which had begun to fade when Flagler finished.

Flagler made the railroad and built some unsightly barracks called hotels, but still the people didn't come in pay loads until Fisher cleared Miami Beach and built a paradise which changed the winter psychology of the country and reduced the famous French Riviera to the raffish status of a Brighton or a Benton Harbor.

Up to Fisher's time at Miami Beach only a hundred families, more or less, and rich ones, too, wintered in seclusion at Palm Beach and a few hundred other primitive towns along the East Coast. The moneyed people of the Middle West went to the Gulf to shiver in the cold rains, but, all told, only a rich and privileged few followed the sun towards its winter home until Fisher made Miami Beach.

Local and State chambers of commerce will gladly provide statistics to prove the change and Florida, doubtless in time, may even the book and score an assist for Carl Fisher.

Trailer Tintypes

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

SOME YEARS AGO the romances of the Jews and gentiles in Louis Golding's "Magnolia Street" had a certain fairy-tale quality about them, and all Mr. Golding's homely Yiddish vernacular and all the tea-with-lemon and cheese blintz embellishment he employed did not serve to dispel the intensely sentimental atmosphere of his novel. His people were essentially as real—and as appealing—as the actors in another successful work on racial tolerance—"Abie's Irish Rose."

It is an interesting comment on the present state of the Jews that the same "Magnolia Street" people may be projected into a fantastic melodrama which every reasonable standard of art and history should be rejected as an impossible fictional invention, and which we must, nevertheless, accept today as truthful because the psychopathic imaginations of the Nazi masters of Germany have made the most horrible of fairy tales into reality.

It is the chief significance of Mr. Golding's new novel, "Mr. Emmanuel" (Viking Press, $2.50): it is an attempt to project a reasonable, sensitive man of good will into the center of the Nazi horror, to replace the hysterical reports and the cold statistical impression of the anti-Semitic campaigns in Germany with an emotional reality.

Mr. Emmanuel, the patriarchal Jew who journeys into Berlin on an errand of mercy, is, it is true, a bit sweeter and saner than even a man of good will should be. Wandering among the Jew-cursing German citizens and among the furtive cowering Jews in their dark homes, he is something of a Hebraic Mr. Chips from Magnolia street. This exaggerated loveliness and innocence of the old man are often unconvincing, but they serve an excellent dramatic purpose. When Mr. Golding drags the bewildered, trembling old man into a Naziquisition, has him starved and beaten and tortured and clubbed almost to death in a government dungeon, the atrocity becomes so frightful, because of one's intimate knowledge of Mr. Emmanuel's sensitivity, that it is difficult to read on.

MR. EMMANUEL undertakes the crusade into Germany because of his love for a young refugee, a boy who has been put in the care of his old friend of Magnolia street, Rose Berman, the girl who married a gentile. He is the son of a Jewish father and an Aryan mother. The father was shot trying to escape, but the mother lived and wrote soliciting letters to the little boy, Bruno, until the time Mr. Emmanuel came to know him. Now the boy is in anguish because the flow of letters has ceased, and he suspects that his mother is no longer alive. Mr. Emmanuel is the only one who seems able to pierce the boy's frozen defense against people, and by a subtle intuitive sense to win his love. It is when the boy attempts suicide because of his fright and loneliness that Mr. Emmanuel, armed with a passport, a brief case, his pinces, a pillow and a comforting traveler's rug, takes his weary bones to Germany. Louis Golding is not a subtle novelist, and though his Mr. Emmanuel might be a character out of Robert Nathan's gallery, the story has none of the delicacy or the economy of Mr. Nathan's type of work. "Magnolia Street" people shriek with emotion. The refugee children are tense in their misery, Jewish clan loyalty and Jewish sensitivity and Jewish quaintness are piled on mountainous proportions. The Nazi outrages and insults and tortures are dramatized in wholesale quantity—and yet, such is the temper of our times, there seems to be a certain appropriateness in the melodramatic quality of Mr. Golding's work.

NORMAN COLLINS, author of "Love in Our Time" (Harper, $2.50), is less reactive than Mr. Golding to the latest news, political and economic. He has written ably and with laudable accuracy an account of the dreary, routine life of a group of lower middle-class suburban citizens in England. The suburbs of London and their "underground" commuters seem even more depressed and sunk than do the American inhabitants of the subway. They are submerged under the same burdens of installment debt, rent, insecurity of employment, marital dullness and social regimentation—but our own lower middle classes seem to have vitality of individual spirit and a kinship with ordinary proletarian life that salvage their existence for them. The English are cursed with a traditional worship of respectability, however, and they squirm now in their social complexity.

A modern writer, one should suppose, who simply records the fact of that squirming and observes the phenomenon as a biologist, without suggesting the directions of revolt or of social tragedy or of salvation, is not completing his task adequately. In Josephine Lawrence's American novels, or in such stories as "Little Man, What Now?" the realism is combined with an intense study of character and individual suffering, or with a suggestion of larger economic pattern. Mr. Collins leaves his story in the primary grades of realism, and the result is authentic photography of a dull subject.

NO ONE will dispute Mr. Mark Channing's expert knowledge of the mores of India, for his novel, "The Sacred Falls" (Lippincott, $2.50), is loaded full of detailed information about communal and caste life that has an unmistakable tinge of truth. Mr. Channing's story is a graceful combination of a social struggle involving religious castes and centering about an irrigation project fostered by the British government, and a personal love story of the daughter of Govind, Hindu merchant, and the son of the Rissalor Major. Before the drama is through, the irrigation conflict has split open the entire community, and the author is able to demonstrate effectively the inroads of progress on the traditional religious life of the primitive village.

Remaking The South

By Ernest K. Lindley

A Sound Investment

HERE ARE 116,000 farm families in the South. Three or four years ago they were worth $451 per family. This, on the average, represented everything they owned—including farm equipment, furniture and clothes—after their debts had been deducted.

By the end of the 1938 crop year, the net of these 116,000 families had risen by a total of $35,000,000—or to $752 per family—after all debts had been deducted. Most of that $35,000,000 was invested in tools and equipment made by Northern industries.

How did it happen? These families could not borrow money from the banks. They were not even suitable risks for the Farm Credit Administration, which helps to finance more prosperous farmers. Most of them, in fact, wrote on relief or in need of relief.

What happened was this: The Farm Security Administration made small loans, for interest, mules, seed, etc. In tens of thousands of cases it worked out written leases under which tenants would have an incentive to improve the land and buildings. Most important, it sent people into the field to show these families how to raise something besides cotton, how to enrich their soil by crop rotation, how to produce and preserve for winter use a considerable part of their own food.

But more varied food, too, than many of them had known before. Last year these families canned more than 23,000,000 quarts of fruits and vegetables for their own use—more than 200 quarts per family. Until FSA agents showed them how, many of these farm wives had never canned anything in their lives.

These families have been put on their feet. Many of them have been paying off their FSA loans more rapidly than the installments become due. FSA expects, with interest, more than 80 per cent of the total amount it has put out in the South in rehabilitation loans.

83 Families Picked For FSA Experiment

THERE ARE 83 other Southern farm families, more fortunate than most of those 116,000. They were picked to live in the experimental farm community which FSA made out of a bankrupt cotton plantation in Georgia. Each has a good house and about 75 acres of land which he rents and may eventually own. Each has a small store, cotton gin, and seed cleaner, and carries milk insurance. Instead of cotton alone, these farmers raise also tobacco, peanuts, melons and livestock, as well as vegetables, fruits and poultry for their own use. For small monthly payments they receive technical and financial attention.

Most of these families were absolutely destitute when they got the chance to try their luck in this experimental farm community. They have been increasing their net worth—over and above all debt—by about $250 per family per year. The average family in original group of which have lived in poverty since its beginning in 1935 now owns $232 worth of work stock, $115 worth of farm equipment, $267 worth of hogs and poultry, and $231 worth of other livestock. The Government will get back most of its investment—not all, because the housing was a bit too expensive.

There are 83 FSA experimental communities in the South. They are of many different kinds. Part of the cost will have to be charged to the experiment, but the rest probably will pay out in full. FSA has gradually evolved a simple, solid farm house that can be built for $1,100. This is within reach of thousands of Southern families, although it is still too expensive for a family earning less than $500 a year. With a moderate subsidy, such as is now paid for "slum clearance" in the cities, houses of this type could replace dilapidated shacks throughout the cotton belt.

Then there are those families—7,000 in all—who are buying farms with the help of the 3 per cent 40-year loans which FSA makes under the Bankhead farm tenant act.

Rebuilding Of Southern Agriculture Not Cure-All

THE REBUILDING of Southern agriculture at the bottom is not a cure-all. The birth rate on the farm is high, and the country needs the need for farm labor; there isn't enough good land to provide a subsistence homestead for every rural family. But the purchasing power of the growing out of a rural agriculture will give jobs to many who cannot be absorbed on the land.

Mr. Alexander, FSA administrator, says that the Government could profitably invest a billion dollars a year for many years to come in rehabilitating the Southern farmer. Profit from every angle—the improvement of people, the improvement of land, the reduction of relief costs now and in the future, the increase of the national income and wealth—all in addition to the direct repayment to the Government of most of the money invested. This is what the "budget balancers" call an "orgy of spending." To me it calls for a sound business proposition.

Hamilton Says U. S. Woes Cause Europe's Unrest

Owego, N. Y., July 25 (AP)—John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, said today that European unrest is "in some measure a product of the American economic scene."

In an address at the annual Tioga County Republican rally, Hamilton explained European unrest as "in some measure a product of the American economic scene."

"It draws on the four corners of the globe for much of what it consumes and, in doing this, it contributes largely to the well-being and prosperity of other nations. Seven years of international depression have reduced the demands of this ordinarily prosperous consuming market and have thus aggravated the European distress and contributed to European political unrest."

The Shavian Apocalypse

"Told You So Long Ago," Says G. B. S.

NOTE: The following article was written in anticipation of the birthday of the famous dramatist, George Bernard Shaw, who today enters his eighty-fourth year.

London.

THE WORLD is going to the dogs—and George Bernard Shaw is not altogether displeased as he approaches his 83rd birthday anniversary. That seemed plainly evident to me a number of times during the course of several interviews I recently had with him in his musty but business-like apartment in London.

You see, George Bernard Shaw is getting fed up with the inability of democracy to cope with problems which he has solved in one or another of the dozens of books, scores of plays and hundreds of articles he has written during the past 50 years. And so he isn't at all surprised at the chaotic mess confronting the world today. His attitude is one of "I told you so a long time ago and I don't think it would do any good to tell you so again."

IT WAS as a representative of America's younger generation, a generation determined to listen, learn and profit by the mistakes of the past, that Shaw came to America in 1903. He was then 40 years old and he had far more of the physical and mental zest of youth than I, that his forthcoming birthday would find him at what seemed to me to be the prime of life. I found it no easy task to keep up with this white-haired youngster as he moved restlessly about, discussing subject after subject in a rapid, fire manner of a radio news commentator.

"Young man," declared Shaw at the peak of one of our discussions, "there won't be any war this year. Hitler couldn't afford one right now for obvious financial and military reasons. But he's playing the old game of rattling the sabre for all it is worth. The more he rattles, the more the British and French governments get rattled."

"Mind you, I don't think Chamberlain has become genuinely alarmed," he continued. "After all, he is smart enough at international politics to know what Hitler is up to. Besides, he knows how to use an international crisis as a means of keeping a domestic situation in hand. Surely those dog kennels we call air raid shelters."

Night Session Set On Lending Bill

vote Friday on the Thomas motion, Barkley opened the Administration fight for the lending program. Despite recovery contributions by the WPA, PWA and CCC, the leader said, there still are 10,000,000 jobless and there "has been and is a hesitation by private capital to venture far out from the shore." Unused capital, he said, must be tapped through the program in order to stimulate business and put men to work.

Barkley said there was no reason for "alarm" in the public debt increase from $16,000,000,000 in 1916 to $40,000,000,000 at present, and said there had been "no alternative except collapse of our present economic system" to the Government extending its credit.

When he estimated that "about one-fourth" of the $40,000,000,000 public debt would be "recoverable," he was sharply challenged by Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia. Byrd said he was due for "disappointment" and declared only heavy taxes could make good the losses by Government lending agencies.

Byrd is the author of a series of amendments to reduce the scope of the program by $500,000,000 and to make all bonds issued to finance it subject to taxation. The President at a press conference yesterday said he would have no objection if bonds issued by the RFC to finance the lending were subjected to State and local taxes.

But Barkley told reporters he would do all in his power to defeat the Byrd tax amendment. He said the RFC obligations would make them less readily marketable and hinder the program.

'Son Jimmy' Irks James Roosevelt, Freighter Oiler

Boston, July 25 (AP)—James Roosevelt, 25, a native of Pennsylvania, is getting a wee bit tired of being confused with "Son Jimmy." In 1932 an ardent Republican fired him from a good job because the boss thought he was the President's eldest son. In Buenos Aires last month he asked postal officials to trace a letter and had to make a tour of the city's postal facilities despite his protests that he was not the United States President's eldest son.

He looks a little like the other James Roosevelt, but this one is an oiler aboard the American freighter East Indian, now tied up at the Army base.

Tobacco Growers Want Auctioneers To Abandon Chant

Southern Maryland tobacco farmers want the auctioneers at the two warehouses to abandon their famous chant and "speak English." The tobacco committee of the five southern Maryland counties has proposed to the management of the warehouses at Upper Marlboro and Hughesville that the "sing-song" method of calling off bids be stopped. Farmers complained that they couldn't understand the auctioneers.

ters aren't intended seriously; every Tommy knows they are a joke. But those dog kennels are quite useful insofar as they help nurture war-scare support for Chamberlain's policies, that is, the time-honored policies of British capitalist democracy. Like almost every other modern prime minister, Chamberlain is a very much intent, upon preserving British capitalism through hallucinations about democracy."

TO PROVE his point, Shaw broke off into a long review of British history, emphasizing intermittently that British democracy has invariably been used to further the interests of capitalism. By the time he had covered the subject, it was quite evident that he had no high opinion of democracy.

"What sort of government would suit you, Mr. Shaw?" I asked. "A socialist government, of course—the only sane kind of government, as I've said a thousand times. If the democratic countries knew what's good for them, they would hurry up and introduce socialism while the introducing is still possible. Fascism is increasingly making a better showing than democracy these days and democracy had better watch out."

"Do you mean," I interjected, "that you consider fascism superior to democracy?" "Certainly not," he replied. "I am not a fascist. Compared to Italy, Germany and Japan, the democratic nations are in a perpetual funk. Democracy as we know it has been shown up by fascism for what it really is: an outmoded relic of the American era for capitalism."

"But you, a Socialist, Mr. Shaw, are making a case for fascism, an ideological competitor." "Nonsense," retorted Shaw. "I have no use for fascism. As a matter of fact I abhor fascism. If I had my way I would drop Hitler and his like into the sea."

Shaw's fingers snapped unequivocally as he made the last remark. There was a thought, something about his enthusiastic smile that indicated that he really relished the idea of putting dictators in their place in the manner he had proposed.

"BUT THE POINT," he continued, "is that fascism has demonstrated the absurdity of democracy. Look at Germany and look at England. Germany knows what it wants, knows how to get it and is getting it. England doesn't know what it wants, doesn't know how to get what it thinks it wants, and isn't getting it."

'Lost Colony' Mystery Thought Solved

virtual destruction of the colony by Indians. A few weeks ago, a granite slab was found in South Carolina, signed by Eleanor Dare and giving a list of 17 colonists killed by the Indians. The slab also indicated the surviving colonists were moving southwest.

This stone and the 12 stones, discovered by the archaeologists, were found in the area south of Roanoke where the last 13 stones were found. Because of the discovery, however, it was believed no traces of bones or skulls would ever be located.

Of the 64 colonists believed buried in the South Carolina spot, 48 are listed by name in the 13 stones summarized in number. The burial stones each carried the added and ominous note, "murdered by the Indians." On one of the newly discovered stones, Eleanor Dare wrote her father that the colonists would continue their southward movement with four "fleeing men." The word "fleeing" was believed to indicate liegemen or vassals. The Peaces presumed that this was a reference to friendly Croatan Indians.

Another stone told of "moche labour wee putt certain names heyr." The messages laboriously carved in stone never served their purpose, pointed out Dr. Haywood Pearce, but they were a success in that they never again saw his father and these graves stones attest to the burial of 64 of his ill-fated comrades in what was then the primeval forest of Roanoke Island, South Carolina.

Father, Mother And Aunt Contend For Girl, 11

The father, mother and aunt of 11-year-old Alice Elizabeth Corvin contended for her custody before Justice Lühring in District Court yesterday.

Mark P. Corvin, of Bluefield, W. Va., asked for a writ of habeas corpus awarding him his daughter, on the strength of a decree in a West Virginia court. His counsel was Andrew F. Oehmann.

His divorced wife, Mrs. Shirley B. Ruark, of Baltimore, pleaded that her child be allowed to live with her, now that she was able to give her a home. Her pleas were supported by Attorney Irvin Goldstein.

O'Connor To Talk To Poultrymen At U. of Md. Today

Gov. Herbert R. O'Connor will speak at Poultry Day exercises at the University of Maryland today. Hundreds of Maryland poultry farmers and foreign delegates to the World's Poultry Congress at Cleveland, Ohio, will attend. The university's new poultry building and plant will be dedicated.

Among foreign delegates expected are Fred C. Elford, poultry commissioner of Canada; W. A. Koch, poultry director of Denmark; Karl Vetter, president of the World's Poultry Science Association, Berlin; Percy Francis, poultry commissioner of Great Britain, and James E. Rice, poultry manager of Cornell University and vice president of the World's Poultry Congress. The Maryland State Poultry Council will hold its annual summer conference starting at 3 p. m.

Franklin—What's the name, again?

Jim—Farley.

Franklin—Oh, yes, I remember you vaguely.

Jim—I was afraid you wouldn't. Franklin—Well, Mr. Farley, what's on your chest?

Jim—What's the idea calling me "Mister." I used to be "Jim" to you.

Franklin—Pardon me. It was just an error.

Franklin—Aren't you getting touchy?

Jim—I always was touchy on matters of friendship.

Franklin—There is no question about our friendship, is there?

Jim—That's what I'd like to know!

Franklin—Let's be frank. What's worrying you, Jim?

Jim—I want to know where you stand. And incidentally where I stand.

Franklin—Jim, you're all wrong. You're imagining things.

Jim—I was born and raised in Haverstraw, N. Y., where we have cold winters, and I know ice when I see it.

Franklin—I insist you're wrong in this instance. You're still at the wheel of the party machine.

Jim—Don't try to kid me, please. I know Corcoran and Cohen are more than mere hitch-hikers.

Franklin—You've been reading the newspapers too much.

Jim—I don't have to read newspapers to know when there's a big drop in the temperature, but if you say it's unintentional it's okay with me. But I think I am entitled to know how you stand on a third term?

Franklin—Joe Guffey and Bob Jackson say I haven't even had a first or second term yet, because so many of my plans were balked.

Jim—You and I know each other too well to try to kid ourselves that way.

Franklin—Do you hold that I have had two terms?

Jim—If I haven't, I've been doing a lot of letter writing on a wrong assumption. Let's run down to brass tacks. Would you run for a third term?

Franklin—We haven't made up our minds.

Jim—What do you mean "we"? Franklin—I don't like your tone, Jim.

Jim—This close to a campaign a tone don't matter. Would you take a third term?

Franklin—Do you honestly think three terms as President are too many?

Jim—I remember back when we both thought if you got one term it would be a break!

Mickey Rooney Proves Mettle in New Hardy Film

Helen Gilbert Valuable Addition to the Cast;
Variety Club to Select Orphan for Coast Trip;
News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

WHETHER DUE to Woody S. Van Dyke's discreet direction or to some more obscure cause, or causes, Master Mickey Rooney does not "mugging" in "Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever," opening on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater tomorrow. On the contrary, it was borne in on a quorum of the drama desks at yesterday afternoon's preview screening that Master Rooney was turning in one of his sincerest and most believable performances to date, in the role of an adolescent who quite understandably falls hopelessly (almost) in love with the beautiful young dramatic teacher who comes to Carvel to stage the school play. Mickey Rooney is a real actor and not an incipient clown in this one.

BELL

all possess. "In the spring, a young man's fancy, etc." carries the idea a little better.

Otherwise, "Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever" conforms pretty rigidly to the usual Hardy formula. The play is peopled by the same characters, plus Helen Gilbert and Terry Kilburn, and the familiar pattern is even carried out to the point of involving Judge Hardy in financial difficulties that look plenty black for a time, but modify their tones in time for the picture's completely happy fadeout.

—With Andy, as per schedule, restored to the good graces and arms of Polly Benedict.

One suspects that the discriminating public will not hesitate to dominate "Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever" the most completely entertaining of all the pictures in which the genial and well-balanced Hardy family have been involved. It has something that none of its predecessors has possessed—thanks in no small measure to Helen Gilbert.

This Miss Gilbert is one of the authentic "finds" of the season. She was "discovered" so the story goes, playing the cello in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's recording orchestra, urged by Director Van Dyke to take a screen test and then promptly forgotten. Not only she was sent to him as a possibility for the role of Rose Meredith in "Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever" did Woody have the faintest idea that she was the girl tested at his behest. Not only did she prove a "possibility" for the part; she proved the ideal selection for it. Miss Gilbert is a blonde young woman of delicate and sensitive beauty, with limpid eyes and a sonorous speaking voice. Although this is her first screen assignment, she performs her task like a veteran trouper. No wonder Andy Hardy fell in love with her. Who wouldn't?

A Sunday or two ago, this department made mention of the "Cinderella Trip to Hollywood," to be tendered orphans throughout the country by Paramount and Linda Ware, an orphan who plays an important part in Paramount's production of "The Star Maker," based on the life of Gus Edwards and starring Bing Crosby. A Washington orphan is to be included in this junket, although at first that seemed doubtful.

The task of selecting this fortunate youngster will devolve upon the Washington Variety Club, the local organization of showmen that has specialized in charitable undertakings. Chief Barker A. E. Lichtman has appointed Rudolph Berger, chairman; Carter Barron, of Loew's, Inc.; Sam Galant, of Columbia Pictures; Eddie Fontaine, of Paramount, and J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the FBI, as a committee to choose the lucky child to represent the National Capital on a thrilling trip. The choice will be made on a basis of charm, school record, personality and deportment. The committee also has the power to select a chaperon, the entire expenses of the jaunt to be borne by Paramount.

Needless to say, the orphan chosen will enjoy the experience of a lifetime and bring back to her less fortunate associates dazzling tales of a magic land.

In recognition of his successful operation of the Mount Vernon Auto Theater, E. M. Loew, at the head of the open-air enterprises, has doubled Manager Irving Shapiro's duties by appointing him manager also of the new Gov. Ritchie Open-Air Theater, on the outskirts of Baltimore. In view of his expanded duties, Mr. Shapiro has turned his publicity work at the Mount Vernon over to Leo Pinkus. Congratulations all around in what is always say.

And speaking of the Virginias, as we were by indirection, Zetta Jewel, jr., who recently scored so decisively at the Cross Roads Theater and is expected to again next week, has been named Tomato Queen of the third annual tomato festival of West Virginia. She was named by Representative Jennings Randolph. This regal status involves festivities at Berkeley Springs on September 2, 3 and 4. Miss Jewel will be crowned by the Governor and preside at a Tomato Ball and the Governor's Ball. Lettuce not turnip our noses!

"Bachelor Mother," starring Ginger Rogers in what is said to be her best role, will open at RKO-Keith's tomorrow evening at 8, according to late dispatches.

Hollywood, July 25.—If Warner Brothers and Dixie Davis, who figured as the lawyer in the notorious Dutch Schultz case, can get together on price, his story, "Things I Remember," today the reported asking price of $100,000 is out and that he wouldn't be interested unless Davis and the magazine agree on a more reasonable figure.

The story deals with the New York underworld, the conviction of Hines and Davis' romance with Hope Dare. I am reminded, although the stories are not entirely alike, of "The Great Mouthpiece," which Gene Fowler wrote some years ago on William Fallon, well-known criminal lawyer. Davis, who turned State's evidence, is now in prison serving a short term.

Great plans have been formulated by Howard Hawks and Ernest Hemingway, the well-known author, which include a trip to Africa similar to the historic "Trader Horn" expedition. Hemingway, who wrote "Farewell to Arms," one of the world's greatest pictures, "The Sun Also Rises," and also many short stories, is now in Key West, Fla. As soon as "The Front Page," with Irene Dunne and Cary Grant, is completed, the director-producer will join the author to confer on the African epic, based on an original Hemingway, as yet unnamed. Hawks was delighted today when word came that Shipwreck Kelly, a mutual friend of both, had completed the deal.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Gilbert Roland has been consoling himself in Constance Bennett's absence with Grace Poggli; Wallace Beery's ex-wife, Rita Foyt, is in the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital; Orson Welles, beard and all, escaped the huge crowd at the Helen Hayes opening unnoticed. The largest mob ever to storm this theater gave the policemen a busy evening. Some of the stars left the back way, but there were autograph seekers even on the fire escape; Bob Taylor has wisdom tooth trouble; the new Don Ameche baby has been named Thomas Anthony. Dick Foran's second son will be christened Patrick—Pat for short. His older brother is Mike; Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond have sent out invitations to a tea August 6, in honor of Lily Pons, Dalcies.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., July 25.—When I wrote an article on Easter Sunday called, "A Goodwill Campaign Needed in Our Studios," it brought a greater response from strangers than anything I've ever done. While my expressions were slightly different, in substance they were no more nor less than moral re-argumentation boiled down to the bone—Love thy neighbor as thyself.

The other night I witnessed the most inspiring sight these old eyes have ever dwelt on. It's the first time I've ever seen 2,000 men, women and children marching for peace instead of war, with 25

Sweetbread Stew Is Specialty In 'Aunt Sammy's' Household

She Serves It With Ripe Olive Sauce;
Other Favorites Are Rice With Curry,
And Gumbo With Plenty of Okra

By Martha Elynn,
The Post Food Editor

Favorite recipes of leading home economists of Washington are presented daily in this column.

"AUNT SAMMY," of the United States Department of Agriculture, is the guest food editor of The Washington Post today. Helen Crouch Douglas, whose radio releases on homemaking are broadcast daily from 365 local stations in the 48 States and Hawaii. Syracuse, N. Y., is the birthplace of Mrs. Douglas, and as alma maters she claims the universities of Syracuse, Oregon, and Cornell. Mrs. Douglas says that her positions have been varied, ranging from teaching homemaking to Mexican schoolgirls in Arizona, and camp cookery to Oregon college boys, to teaching English at the University of Oregon and journalism at Cornell. She came to Washington from Cornell to assume her present position, and along with her radio writing she does occasional broadcasting.

Sweetbreads in Ripe Olive Sauce

Mrs. Douglas has given The Post food readers the following

Save Money By Budgeting

"GOOD-BY, GOOD-BY," wave the bride and groom. But are they saying good-bye, too, to fun, carefree days? Not these clever moderns!

"We have worked out a budget plan," they say, "which cares for our special wants as well as our daily living—leaves money for pleasures, too."

Does that sound like financial wizardry? It isn't really. You simply plan ahead in your spending, allot to each item, such as rent and food, a certain portion of your income.

Good idea to look at a model budget plan based on an income like yours—then adjust figures to your own wants.

A charming home may be your first want—you have important friends to entertain—so you decide to spend $45 for rent out of a salary of $100. A little high, but you economize in other ways.

Your food bills? Fifty cents a day for each person is a safe rule. You easily stay within it by keeping meal plans flexible, watching prices. For instance, jot down "fresh fruit" for dessert. Then, if raspberries are high, strawberries cheap, buy the latter.

But suppose entertaining knocks your food budget sky-high? Have more fun, fewer "leaks" by setting aside a separate sum each month for company, recreation.

And no losing that glorious feeling of independence when each has a personal allowance! How much should it be? What to allow for clothes? Savings?

Our 40-page booklet, HOW TO BUDGET YOUR INCOME, tells how to plan your spending to get what you want, suggests amounts proper for routine expenses. Gives sample budgets used by real people, ruled pages for a year's entries.

Send 15c in coins for your booklet, HOW TO BUDGET YOUR INCOME, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

recipe: "Since promptness at meals is not a characteristic of the Douglas household, stews of all kinds are favorite main dishes, because stews can wait. At this time of year I concentrate on curries and rice and on gumbo made with plenty of okra. In winter I serve goulash and plain brown beef stew. For special occasions our prize stew is sweetbreads in ripe olive sauce. Ingredients are: A half pound of heart sweetbreads, bacon fat, 3 slices bacon cut in small pieces, a small onion chopped fine, 2 stalks celery sliced, a tablespoon of Worcestershire sauce, a can of ripe olives cut in pieces and the liquid from the can, salt and pepper to taste. Soak the sweetbreads in ice water about an hour and then simmer them in salted water for 20 minutes. Drain and dry them. Then brown in hot bacon fat. Add the onion, the bacon pieces, Worcestershire sauce, celery and ripe olive juice and simmer until the flavors blend. Add the chopped ripe olives, thicken with a little flour and serve on hot platter garnished with whole ripe olives.

"Maybe I should add that my husband's favorite dessert at any time of year is gingerbread wafles and whipped cream.

Shirtmaker Frock Goes Feminine

The trim, tailored shirtwaist frock (above) leans to the feminine side with its softly pleated skirt and full bodice. Made of silk rayon in bright and dark-colored plaids, the fabric has a decided organdie-like finish that gives it a cool, airy appearance. This makes it especially appropriate for hot weather in town or country

Your Figure, Madame!

Exercise Takes 4 Inches Off Woman's Hips

EXERCISE may not be "reducing" but it is certainly streamlining! And for proof there's the determined lassie who lost eleven pounds—all off the waist and hips. She exercised three inches off the waistline and four off the hips.

You can, of course, exercise or not, just as you please. But to make sure you know what you are missing if you do not exercise, I'm quoting:

Four Inches Off Hips
"Thanks to exercises, I have slimmed my waistline from 26 inches to 23, and my hips from 38 inches to 34. I lost only eleven pounds—but what a difference I have made in my measurements. I have a suggestion to make which other reducers might like. Following exercise, I have found it most helpful to slap the hips with a solution of camphor dissolved in alcohol."

The solution is an astringent and, along with the circulation-raising slaps, it helps to tighten the skin. But I wouldn't advise it as a substitute for exercise! If you want to work wonders on your hips and waistline, you can count on exercise like the following:

MOVEMENT: Work the knees up and down like pistons—bring alternate knees high up toward the chest and shooting them straight down. Do this 25 times on the left side, then shift to the right for 25 more times before calling it a day. As you will recognize, this is an easier but more effective version of the old bicycle exercise.

And here is an exercise that should be called "rock-a-bye hips!" POSITION: Lying on the back on the floor with the hands clasped under the head and the legs straight down.

MOVEMENT: Rock from side to side, propelling yourself mostly with the muscles in the midriff as you rock over to the left, then back over to the right. Keep the shoulders and feet on the floor, using the derriere as a rocker.

POSITION: Lying on the floor on the left side with the head cradled on the left arm, the right hand out on the floor for support. Have the right leg on top, legs straight down.

MOVEMENT: Hold the left leg still and swing the right leg away out in front, then away out in back. Swing 12 times before changing sides. You can gradually work up to 25 swings for each side.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Airline Stewardesses Always Smiling, Helpful, Hard-Working, Good to Look at;
Swell Girls, Alice Hughes Declares

Eastward by Air. At 7 of a beautiful clear evening Hall and I clambered aboard a Mainliner at Mills Field San Francisco and a few minutes later were seeing one of the loveliest of sights, an exquisite sunset over the Pacific.

The parting from California was hard, even painful, but the smooth dash eastward, 12,000 feet above the hills touched by the last sun, was so lovely and exciting that there was no room in our hearts for regrets.

I often wonder a little at those who resist the lure of travel by air. My pal, Stella Unger, whom I left in Hollywood, couldn't be dragged into a ship by a whippet tank, for example.

But for beauty and a modest sense of adventure, flying has no equal. And then, of course, there's the matter of getting somewhere quickly when time won't wait.

Within an hour Miss Stammer, R. N., was setting a tasty dinner before us, in our regular Pullman-like compartment. And as I watched this girl at her work I was struck all over again by the constant charm and hard toil of these girls who fly the air lanes.

Before we sat down at Salt Lake City, a few hours later, she had acted as waitress, bus girl, porter who made up berths for the customers and general listener and advisor. Always smiling and ready with a cheery word—and all the rest of the air stewardesses, in my experience, are just as helpful, hard-working and good to look at. What swell girls!

I stuck my head out the door at Salt Lake and was smacked by a heat wave. "It's been 103 today," said an airport attaché. I thought of San Francisco, just a few hours away—sighed and went to bed, leaving Hall to prowling.

GIRL AROUND THE AIR. When I woke in the morning it was Chicago and breakfast was going. I had a howling headache that had begun away back yonder in Hollywood, but had my orange juice like a good girl. By the time we had digested the Chicago newspapers and looked out the window at the flying countryside it was Cleveland. Hall's home town. He didn't seem thrilled but went after his lunch on the ship like a famished wolf.

I noted a New York dispatch in the Chicago papers saying that Peter Arno and "Timmie" Lansing were divorcing. The clever cartoonist was once married to Lois Long, shop prowl for the same weekly for which he draws. "Timmie" was his second try.

Now I hear he has been beating Brenda Ducky Darling Frazier about a bit. It's my hunch that big, good-looking Curtis Arno Peters (his square handle) is one of those occasional phenomena, a natural born bachelor, just not suited to double harness.

AFTER CLEVELAND it was the home stretch for Newark, and

In Nine Cases Out of Ten, 'In-Law' Trouble Is Caused By Wife's Shortcomings, Reader Contents

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Since so many persons have been writing to you, recently, about the "in-law" problem, I would like to add my bit. I am willing to bet that in nine cases out of ten, "in-law" trouble is caused by the daughter-in-law. I have seen many cases in which the girl thought she was smart in taking her husband from his family. Yet, why should a man give up his family after marriage? The woman doesn't. She brings her mother and relatives into her home for the husband to support, at the same time resenting anything her husband may do for this family, regardless of what he may owe them.

These complaining daughters-in-law usually say, "I try to be nice to his family." But I wonder if they have ever tried really to like the husband's relatives? Have they ever heard that love begets love? I think it is a young wife's business honestly to like, and be liked by, her husband's family before marriage. Her husband will always be grateful to her for being kind to his family, and such an effort will repay her two hundred-fold in happiness. A man wants his mother, sisters and wife to be friends; to approve of each other, at least.

I have two sisters-in-law. Both of my brothers live with their mothers-in-law. One sister-in-law is considerate of our family and is loved by everyone of us. We are glad for my brother that he has such a sweet wife and we think of her as another sister; she fits in so well. The other sister-in-law is selfish and has never given us any reason to like her. She watches her husband every minute of the day and tries to keep him tied to her. If he comes to see us and stays over 10 minutes, she calls him on the telephone and has some place for him to take her or some excuse for him to come right home.

She leads him a dog's life and we can't help it that we do not love her as we do our other sister-in-law. We have always believed that she married him simply because she wanted a husband. Her very best quality is a keen mentality, and she is almost stupid, so that she cannot appreciate his best quality. Just the same, she thinks we are to blame for not liking her. We are sure she has never liked us. We wouldn't think of making trouble for them, but we are sure it will come soon enough—but when it does, she can't blame us. Well, I have that off my mind. Sincerely yours, MILDRED.

'Amid the Alien Corn'

DEAR MILDRED: So-o-o. You are, in the most literal sense of the word, looking for trouble, eventually, between your brother and his wife. Scarcely an affirmatively constructive, magnanimous attitude, is it? In view of your attitude, so candidly stated—and one assumes that you are spokesman for the entire family—one can hardly blame your sister-in-law for her ill-conceived distrust of you (that is to say, the family's) influence upon him in her absence.

Whatever her shortcomings as a personality and as a wife, it appears to me that your family's attitude toward that marriage is a factor potentially as demoralizing to the relationship as any allegedly shortsighted practices of hers. You wonder if daughter-in-laws, in general, have heard that love begets love? Are you practicing that theory in this instance? And have you ever heard of chemical affinity, between persons; and its reverse, chemical antagonism?

With no thought of discrediting the no doubt very fine qualities of your better-loved sister-in-law, I would suggest that one—and perhaps the major—reason why she fits so harmoniously into her husband's family picture probably has to do with the fortuitous, happenstance fact that she is chemically in rapport with the personalities of its members. Either that, or she has the chameleon faculty of being—or seeming to be—all things to all people.

The fact that your other sister-in-law finds herself amid "alien corn," figuratively speaking, in consorting with her husband's family, is not necessarily to be construed as evidence of her essential unworthiness. Nor would the additional fact—if it happens to exist—that her personality is happily antagonistic to the several personalities of her various in-laws. If your brother possesses a "keen mentality," one may well suppose that he knew what he was doing, in marrying her, and it may be that her very stupidity (alleged) appeals to him as extraordinarily soothing, in contrast to the sharper wits and more aggressive mentalities of his immediate kin.

Moreover, if your family's individual and collective brain power (shall we say?) is incomparably greater, or more able, than hers, doesn't the moral responsibility automatically devolve upon your shoulders to do the lion's share of adjusting? What of the theory of noble obligation (the obligation of the better endowed toward the lesser endowed)? Would you hold her accountable, or penalize her for the lack of qualities she was not given and does not pretend to possess? This is, no doubt, a rather idealistic view of the matter, but I venture to sketch it in order to suggest how far short you—and your family—are, falling, from an admirably constructive humanitarian attitude toward your brother's wife and your brother's marriage.

I do not agree with you that the burden is on a young wife assiduously to court the favor

Back Yards Can Be Easily Brightened Up

Little Brick Terrace, Few Colorful Chairs
And Table Help

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

CAN ANYBODY think of a real good reason why back porches have to look so rag-taggle-yy? We're sure that the everyday routine of life would be a lot more fun if the back porch or the back stoop didn't squelch any tendency toward soaring spirits. We could do plenty to remedy the situation if we took a tip from European peasant porches. A Dutch back door could lead out on a little brick-paved terrace, furnished with brightly painted chairs or a bench and maybe a table to use for shelling peas, running through the cook book for some special recipe, making out grocery orders or attending to any one of the many sitting-down jobs involved in kitchen work. (How much more pleasant to sit out in such a place in fine weather than inside. Add a shelf or two to hold interesting old jugs or pottery. Hang up some brightly colored peasant looking plates from the five-and-ten, or else paint these plate designs on the wall up above the doorway. Add a woolen scalloped painted bright blue around the window overlooking this little terrace, and train a grape vine arbor over your little court if you want shade. Or edge the space with prim rows of garden vegetables.

Another idea would be to pave the space outside the kitchen door with blue-green tiles, add a wrought iron bridge-size table and a couple of chairs painted white. For that matter—the area outside the kitchen door would be the ideal place for the outdoor dining table, along with the hammock or the glider if it's a pleasantly presentable part of the yard. Because there's no question but what eating outdoors is a much more regular habit when its convenient to the kitchen for service.

If a screened-in back porch is the problem, these rejuvenations can be accomplished even more easily. Then the porch floor can be painted in a bright color; discarded chairs from inside can get checked gingham cushions; a string of bright Mexican gourds or gay pottery can be hung up, and there you are.

Paint Pointers

If the bedroom or dining alcove painted furniture begins to look a bit drab and it is not possible to repaint, brighten it by painting the knobs a bright color to match or contrast with the color scheme of the room. Fresh paint does much to raise morale. If the doors are painted you can brighten them up by painting the knobs the color as that used on the furniture knobs.

Mrs. Anne Archbold Charts Holiday Aboard Chinese Junk

Daughter of Standard Oil Co-Founder Is Expected to Sail Toward South Seas; Explorer Son-in-Law and Wife May Accompany

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

WHILE WASHINGTONIANS are sailing for Europe in droves, one, at least, is charting an unusual and fascinating jaunt in the opposite direction.

Leaving next week for a trip that would strike the fancy of any modern Marco Polo is Mrs. Anne Archbold, who has planned a sailing holiday in an authentic Chinese junk (one of those quaint crafts with lug-sails).

The vessel, so I understand, has been built especially for the journey and is equipped with a motor as well as sails, so that whether there's wind or not the trip can always be full speed ahead. Exactly where Mrs. Archbold will go, I can't tell you. She is in New York now; won't be back until Saturday; so I couldn't check her itinerary. Her friends are of the impression, however, that as soon as she gets to her junk, which is ready and waiting at a Chinese port, she will set sail toward the South Seas. Anyway, she won't return to Washington for many months; and there's no telling how many ports she will touch before she decides to call it a finished holiday.

On her way to the Orient, chances are she will stop off in California to visit her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Nicol Smith. There's even a possibility the two will accompany her. Mr. Smith, who is an explorer, writer and lecturer, knows the South Seas inside and out; and any traveling he does is grist to his mill. As you know, motion pictures he has taken in many strange lands are features of his lectures. Incidentally, his manager is Colston Leigh, who also handles Mrs. Roosevelt's platform appearances.

Well, whether the Smiths accompany Mrs. Archbold or not, it looks as if she has hit on a trip that will be newsworthy on many accounts. Her friends will remember that sensational sailing journeys are not exactly unusual for Mrs. Archbold. The daughter of John D. Archbold, one of the founders of the Standard Oil Co., she made up her mind to divorce her Irish husband, Armar Sanderson, when they were living abroad. Accordingly, she let her father know, and he sent a tanker to bring her and her four children home. Shortly afterward, she resumed her maiden name and gave it to her sons and daughters.

Notables to Sail On the Manhattan

When the Manhattan lifts anchor and skims out of New York Harbor today, it will be loaded to the gunnels with Capital residents and national notables. The Postmaster General, James A. Farley, and his daughters will be on board—Mrs. Farley is remaining at home—on their way to Poland, where they will visit the American Ambassador and Mrs. Anthony Drexel Biddle, Jr. John D. Hamilton, of the Republican National Committee, also has his name on the passenger list and will go to Paris for a brief stay before heading on to other points. Joannet Shouse, of the American Liberty League, and Mrs. Shouse had also planned to sail on the Manhattan. However, they have canceled their reservations and decided to take their holiday in America. Next month they will be off to Maine to spend several weeks.

Mrs. George Grant Mason, jr., and Mrs. John Hay Whitney are others sailing on the Manhattan. They will go first to England to visit Mrs. Mason's mother, Mrs. Ormond Lawson-Johnston, and then they plan to proceed to Poland to be guests of the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki at Lancut, his family's magnificent estate.

Scotland's Moors Attracts Celebrities

Mrs. North Winship, wife of the Counselor of the United States Embassy at Warsaw, is another who will sail on the Manhattan; and still others are Mr. and Mrs. John O'Donnell and their daughter, Doris, who will go to France, then to Switzerland for a brief stay and from there on to Germany.

Now on their way to Scotland for the grouse shooting season are Walter Evans Edge, former Ambassador to France, Mrs. Edge and their daughters, the Misses Camilla and Mary Edge, who sailed from New York Monday on the Grispholm.

They will be on the moors well ahead of the season as the grouse begin dodging shots there on August 12. No doubt when one or more of the Edges are out hunting, they will have a chance to chat with J. Pierpont Morgan, who will be around those parts through the season; also, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, who is spending the summer at famous Skibo Castle; and Mr. and Mrs. J. Cornelius Rathbone, jr., who will also be in Scotland for the shooting season. Mrs. Rathbone is the daughter of Mrs. Prescott Foster Huidekoper.

Hogue-Groff Wedding Aug. 7

Miss Ruth Orville Groff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Diller Fisher Groff, of Chevy Chase, has selected August 7 as the date of her wedding to Walter Dickerson Hogue, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Hogue, of Hanover, Ind. The ceremony will take place at 2 o'clock in the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church with the Rev. J. Phelps Hand, of Baltimore, officiating.

A reception for the families will follow at the home of the bride-elect's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis In Los Angeles

Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis are at the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles, Calif., after ten days in San Francisco, where Mr. Ellis attended the meeting of the American Bar Association.

While in San Francisco, they were feted at a luncheon given by Vice Admiral and Mrs. Adolphus Andrews on the former's ship, Indianapolis.

The latter part of this week Mr. and Mrs. Ellis will go to San Diego to spend a few days before returning to Washington.

Grosner and Mrs. Drury To Start West Friday
Mr. and Mrs. Clarence W. Grosner will leave Friday for California. Accompanying them to the West Coast will be Mrs. Abner Drury.

The party will go by train, the Grosners having shipped the car ahead, so they will be able to tour the country upon their arrival. After several weeks, Mr. Grosner will return East, while his wife plans to remain in California until November. Mrs. Drury will be on the Coast for a month.

Finnish Minister Holds Informal Dinner Party

The Minister of Finland, Hjalmar J. Procopé, entertained informally last night at another in his series of dinner parties. The event was given at the legation on Tracy place, and guests gathered on the veranda overlooking the garden following the dinner.

Among the guests were the Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Harold Sims, who will leave today for Chatham on Cape Cod. They will spend a month there at the Chatham Inn and will be joined by Mr. Sims' brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ross Sims, of Montreal.

Francis J. Power Weds Miss Busch

Miss Marion Busch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norwin J. Busch, of Peoria, Ill., became the bride of Francis J. Power, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank N. Power, of Chicago, Ill., yesterday in the rectory of St. Patrick's Church, with the Rev. Edgar Lang officiating.

Miss Margaret L. Power, sister of the bridegroom, was the bride's only attendant. Thomas Meade served as best man.

The bride wore white ensemble of silk with white accessories. Her corsage was of white orchids and lilies of the valley. Miss Power was wearing a pink shawl with a cluster of gardenias.

They will make their home at the Hamilton Arms, Flushing, Long Island. Mr. Power is manager of the State of Illinois exhibit at the New York World's Fair.

Summer Theater Cast Entertained

Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock entertained last evening at their summer home in Newport, R. I. The supper party followed the opening performance of the Casino Theatre.

Honor guests were leading members of the cast, including Philip Merivale and Gladys Cooper.

Miss Fleming Engaged To Arthur O'Keeffe

Of interest to Washington is the announcement by Mrs. James Joseph Fleming, of Hilltop, Brookhaven, Long Island, of the engagement of her daughter, Miss Patricia Mary Fleming, to Arthur O'Keeffe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel O'Keeffe of Milton, Mass.

The prospective bride is well known here, having attended Goucher College in Baltimore. She also attended the Academy of St. Elizabeth, and the Hewlett School for Girls. She was introduced to a society in December, 1935, at a tea given by her mother at Hilltop.

Mr. O'Keeffe was graduated from Phillips Exeter Academy and from Johns Hopkins University.

Walter A. Jones' Spending Few Days in New York

Mr. and Mrs. Walter A. Jones, of 2325 Wyoming avenue, are spending several days at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City.

Also at the Waldorf are Miss Elizabeth Browning and her sister, Miss Pearl Browning, who plan to stay in New York for two weeks before returning to their residence here.

Puerto Rico Day Celebrated At New York World's Fair

Secretary Ickes, Maj. Gen. Winship And Rear Admiral Leahy Are Honored Guests at Ceremony; Review Troops

The Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes, with the Governor General of Puerto Rico, Maj. Gen. Blanton Winship, and Rear Admiral William D. Leahy, retiring chief of naval operations, who will soon take over the governorship of Puerto Rico, were honored yesterday at the World's Fair.

They were given a reception at the World's Fair boulevard gate in the morning which was followed by a procession to Peryon Hall, where the official party signed the guest book. Later they reviewed units of the United States Army, Navy and Marine Corps in the Court of Peace. Following a call at the Federal Building and on Mayor LaGuardia the group was honored at a luncheon given by Grover A. Whalen.

Gov. Winship, Admiral Leahy and Mr. Whalen delivered addresses at the official ceremony in the afternoon held at the Puerto Rican exhibit. A reception at the Federal Building for the distinguished visitors completed the program for the day honoring Puerto Rico.

Admiral and Mrs. Leahy plan to sail for Puerto Rico, where Admiral Leahy will take up his new duties as Governor, on September 7. Before they sail, however, the Leahys plan to visit friends who have a country estate in the foothills of the Adirondacks, near Utica. After a visit in Pennsylvania they will go to Rehoboth Beach, Del., where their daughter-in-law, Mrs. William H. Leahy, has taken a cottage for the summer.

La Forteleza, the Governor's palace in Puerto Rico, is being remodeled by Army engineers at present and when the Leahys arrive on the island they will not be able to take possession at once. However, a small house on the grounds of La Forteleza will be at their disposal until the lovely mansion—one of the oldest houses in the Western Hemisphere, having been built in 1592—is completed.

Meanwhile Rear Admiral Harold R. Stark, who will relieve Admiral Leahy as chief of naval operations on August 1, has arrived in Washington and is at the Shoreham. The Leahys' home on Observatory Circle is being made ready for Admiral and Mrs. Stark. Mrs. Stark will not arrive in Washington to stay until October 1. She is remaining at their summer place in Wyoming County, Pa.

Egyptian Minister Among Guests at Hot Springs Party

The Egyptian Minister and Mme. Hassan were among the guests at a cocktail party given Monday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. James W. Gerard at Hot Springs, Va., where they are spending the season at the Homestead.

Others in the company were Mrs. King Perin, Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Kent, Sir Willmot and Lady Lewis, and Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, jr.

On the same afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. George Sloane, of New York and Warrenton, Va., entertained at cocktails having as their guests the Argentine Ambassador and Senora de Espil, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, and Louis L. White and William F. White. Later, the Espils entertained the company at dinner.

General Trujillo Returns to Capital

Gen. Rafael Trujillo arrived in Washington yesterday and is stopping at the legation of the Dominican Republic. Dr. Francisco Benzo Garcia Godoy, Dominican Minister in Cuba; Col. C. A. McLaughlin, military aide to Trujillo, and Donetti Burgos, secretary to the general.

The party arrived here from New York City. Accompanying the general are the minister of public health of the Dominican Republic, Dr. Francisco Benzo Garcia Godoy, Dominican Minister in Cuba; Col. C. A. McLaughlin, military aide to Trujillo, and Donetti Burgos, secretary to the general.

Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock entertained last evening at their summer home in Newport, R. I. The supper party followed the opening performance of the Casino Theatre.

Honor guests were leading members of the cast, including Philip Merivale and Gladys Cooper.

Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock will leave Newport today to spend two weeks in Colorado Springs. They will return to the Rhode Island resort for several weeks before coming back to Washington.

Miss Fleming Engaged To Arthur O'Keeffe

Of interest to Washington is the announcement by Mrs. James Joseph Fleming, of Hilltop, Brookhaven, Long Island, of the engagement of her daughter, Miss Patricia Mary Fleming, to Arthur O'Keeffe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel O'Keeffe of Milton, Mass.

Mr. O'Keeffe was graduated from Phillips Exeter Academy and from Johns Hopkins University.

Mrs. Darling Married to Hugh Fleming

D. C. Man, Louisville, Norfolk Girl Wed at Wellesley, Mass.

At a ceremony yesterday morning at St. Andrew's Church, Wellesley, Mass., Mrs. Betty Davis Darling, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Evans Davis, of Louisville, Ky., and Norfolk, Va., became the bride of Hugh Neely Fleming, jr., of Washington, D. C., and Erie, Pa. He is the son of Mrs. Hugh Neely Fleming and the late Mr. Fleming.

The Rev. Phillimon H. Sturges officiated and the bride was given in marriage by her cousin, Lawrence Lewis, of Richmond, Va. Robert Bruce Stringfellow, of Culpeper, Va., and Roslyn Long Island, was best man. Following the wedding, there was a breakfast at The Inn, where the former Mrs. Darling has been staying with her aunt, Mrs. Thornton Lewis, of Richmond.

The bride, who is the widow of Adm. Edward Darling, of Boston, attended St. George's School in Norfolk and Le Cours du Parc Monceau in Paris. She is the great-granddaughter of William Henry Harrison and a descendant of Benjamin Harrison, John Randolph, of Roanoke, and Thomas Jefferson.

The bride is a member of the Groton School, the University of Virginia, and the school of Journalism, Columbia University. He is a member of the National Press Club of Washington and is the assistant chief of the division of information of the Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration and the New England Forest Emergency. Mr. Fleming numbers among his distinguished ancestors Gen. James E. Fleming and Bishop Neely. He also is a member of the Chew and Johns families of Maryland and the Edward Griswold and Buel families of Connecticut.

Following their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Fleming will be at home after September 1, at Wigtown on the Charles River, Mass.

Mrs. H. D. Flood Visiting Sister

Mrs. Augustus L. Humes, of New York City, has as her guest there her sister, Mrs. Henry D. Flood, of this city, and daughter, Eleanor Flood. After taking in the World's Fair, Flood and her daughter will go to Bar Harbor, Me.

The engagement of Mrs. Humes' daughter, Miss Valerie Graham, to Charles Martin Clark, jr., was recently announced, and plans are under way for the wedding. Miss Flood will be a member of the wedding party.

When in Maine, Mrs. Flood and her daughter will be near Rear Admiral and Mrs. Richard Evelyn Byrd, who have a home on an island at Sullivan, Me. Admiral Byrd is a nephew of the late Representative Flood. At present the Byrds are in the city, and their guests Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Gilpin, of Berryville, Va. The Gilpins plan to leave for their country home in Beverly, Mass., in August, when they will be accompanied by their daughter, Miss Betty Gilpin, and their sons, Kenneth, jr., and Tyson.

William P. Brills Are Honeymooning In N. E. Canada

After a motor trip through New England and Canada, Mr. and Mrs. William Perry Brills will make their home in Arlington, Va. The marriage of the former Miss Flora Virginia Slifer, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Ellen Slifer, of this city, took place on July 22 at 1 o'clock.

The ceremony was held at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Jesse Long, in Hagerstown, Md., before an improvised altar of palms and gladioli with the Rev. J. H. Hollinger officiating.

The bride wore a gown of white lace with matching accessories and carried a bouquet of sweetheart roses and baby's breath. A reception for relatives and out-of-town guests was held immediately following the ceremony.

50 Attend Bethesda Women's Open House

Club's Annual Midsummer Fete
Occasion for Birthday Congratulations
For Mrs. Lilly C. Stone, Long-Time Member

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Fifty members and guests of the Bethesda Woman's Club met at the clubhouse on Sonoma road yesterday for their annual mid-summer open house at which the social committee entertains for members who are in town in July.

Mrs. Louis A. Gravelle, new president of the club, was among those present. The social committee in charge of arrangements included Mrs. Richard Titlow and Mrs. Thomas Cassey.

The members took picnic lunches for those in their parties and the committee served iced tea and cake. Tables were arranged in the sun parlor for the luncheon and bridge was played on the shaded terrace at the southwest side of the house, in the afternoon.

In the morning, Mrs. H. B. Boyd, newly appointed chairman of the literary department of the club, reviewed Nora Waln's latest book, "Reaching for the Stars."

Mrs. Stone Among Members Present

Among those who attended was Mrs. Lilly C. Stone, who has been a member of the club for many years and gave, in memory of her friend, Sally Fontaine Perry, the stone of which the terrace at the clubhouse is built.

The club's summer party usually is the occasion of a birthday celebration in her honor but this year, at her suggestion, it was restricted to congratulations. She is a member of the board of directors of the club and is also an active member of the Bradley Hills Community League and of the Hermon Presbyterian Church, where she played the organ for 50 years. She was born at Glenmore, the farm on the River road on which she now lives, and yesterday was proud to tell her age, 78.

Mrs. Stone's guests were her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Dunbar Stone, Miss Rebecca Chandler and Mrs. Hewitt J. Robertson.

Others Have

Guests With Them

Others who entertained were Mrs. Arthur Hilland, who had as her guests Mrs. F. A. Sagrario, Mrs. Arnold Burr and Mrs. Ralph Herman; Mrs. Gravelle, who had in her party Mrs. F. H. Karr, Mrs. Horace Hampton and Mrs. John Yesair; Mrs. Eugene Bollay, who had as her guests Mrs. Charles Pierce, Mrs. H. R. Byers and Mrs. Leland James.

Among others present were Mrs. H. B. Johnston, Mrs. J. E. Bowen, Jr., Mrs. J. Reed Bradley and her guest, Mrs. Robert Osborne; Mrs. Eugene Doyle and her guest, Mrs. William E. Cartwright; Mrs. Eleanor Cronin; Mrs. Harry J. Pirie, with her guest, Mrs. William Pontius, of Baltimore; Mrs. Richard Nevius and a guest, Mrs. C. G. Davidson; Mrs. Jacob W. Bulger, Miss Dorcas Holman, Mrs. T. W. L. Schellens, Mrs. Dan McKeithen, who had as her guests her mother, Mrs. W. H. Herndon, of York, S. C., and Mrs. R. A. Fowler; Mrs. Manning Dyer, Mrs. John W. Slacks, Mrs. Ralph Cahall, Mrs. J. J. Miller, who had her daughter, Marcia, as her guest; Mrs. Leonard Nicholson, Mrs. Ernest Offutt, Mrs. David Lloyd Davies, Mrs. Jack Erwin, who had with her Miss Nell A. Willauer, of Philadelphia; Mrs. George Schmucker, Mrs. John Mader, who had as her guest Mrs. W. H. Keiler, and Mrs. Victor Ammann.

D. A. R. Projects Announced

Establishment of an endowment fund for the general needs of the Daughters of the American Revolution was announced yesterday as one of the golden jubilee projects of the national society by Mrs. Henry M. Robert, Jr., president general.

The fiftieth anniversary of the D. A. R. will be celebrated on October 11, 1940, by a special gathering of members in Constitution Hall, and the fiftieth Continental Congress will take place in April, 1941.

National committees already have begun work on the various golden jubilee projects. D. A. R. headquarters announced as the 1939 directory of national committee members was issued.

In addition to the endowment fund, other projects are: Construction on the ground floor of Memorial Continental Hall of an archives room to house documents and historical material of the Revolution and early Federal periods.

Presentation of a portrait of Caroline Scott Harrison, first D. A. R. president general to the President Harrison mansion at Indianapolis, now restored as a museum.

Continuance of the project to plant pine trees in accordance with the society's conservation program.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

Betty Zalokar and Mrs. Mildred Anderson.

MEMBERS of the Arts Club who have not yet joined the popular exodus from the Capital to escape its brand of summer weather found refuge from the heat in the clubhouse garden, 2017 I street last night and enjoyed the final club dinner of the season.

The walled garden was dotted with lights and tables were arranged there for members and their guests. Following the dinner the program was presented by Miss Sophie Pearce Casey, who showed pictures and described her travels and recent studies of the old Roman civilization in Africa.

Frank B. Steele, president of the club, and Mrs. Steele acted as hosts for the evening. With them was their young granddaughter, Miss Nancy Olsen, of Buffalo. Other members present, several of whom entertained guests, included: Mrs. Bessie Edison, Mr. and Mrs. Geritt S. Miller, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Warren E. Emley, Miss Maud Burr Morris, Mrs. Samuel A. Kimberly, Miss Lydie Addison, Miss Anne Darlington, Miss Julia Gardner, Miss Grace Hobart, Miss Frances B. Johnston, Mrs. Emma P. Knowlton and Mrs. Hazel L. Nyman. There will be no meetings during August but the regular program of club activities will be resumed in September.

THE GIRLS of Gamma Chapter, Beta Sigma Phi sorority, may have felt the heat when the sun came out yesterday afternoon but they didn't complain about it. The fair weather meant success for their picnic supper last night at Pierce Mill in Rock Creek Park.

Among those present were the educational director, Mrs. E. B. Sunday; Irene Stevenson, president of the District of Columbia Council of the sorority; Mrs. Jean Cassil, Gamma Chapter president; Afton Park, recording secretary; Edna Steinberger, corresponding secretary; Bonnie McKeith, historian; Marjorie Burgen, Mrs. Alice Roberts Koch, Margaret Ottes, Mildred McKirgan, Nadine Krause, Ella Pharoah, Mrs. Victoria Strauch, Mrs. Mildred Vettori.

Kappa Beta Pi To Study Women's Status in 4 Nations

Study of the status of women in this country, Canada, England and France has been adopted as the program of Kappa Beta Pi, international legal sorority, for the next two years, Miss Elizabeth F. Reed, grand dean, has announced.

Miss Reed, who with Mrs. Agnes Brown Stiles, of Washington, grand registrar, was re-elected at the annual convention in Estes Park, Colo., has returned from the West.

The plan presented by the local Kappa Beta Pi chapters for a chapter house in Washington was referred by the convention to the 1940 province conference. The Washington members will be hostesses for the annual convention next year which, as is the custom, will be held at some nearby summer resort.

Gorgas' Daughter Heads Auxiliary

A woman's auxiliary to the Panama Canal Society of Washington has been formed with Mrs. William D. Wrightson, daughter of Gen. W. C. Gorgas, of Isthmian fame, as president.

The auxiliary was organized last Saturday at the outing of the society and will include residents of Washington, Baltimore and adjacent territory who lived on the Isthmus of Panama during the construction of the canal. The Panama Canal Society is composed of men who were engaged in the construction work. Former Representative Maurice H. Thatcher, who served as a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, is president.

The auxiliary officers, in addition to Mrs. Wrightson are: Mrs. Charles F. Wahl, of Washington and the Canal Zone, and Mrs. Thomas M. Reynolds, of Baltimore, vice presidents; Mrs. Harry Moore Payne, of Washington, secretary; Miss Eleanor Charters, of Washington, treasurer; Mrs. Thatcher, Mrs. C. J. Severn, Mrs. Henry E. Spangler, Miss Nina Hansen, all of Washington, and Mrs. C. B. Chisholm, of Baltimore, members of the executive committee.

Three District D. of A. Councils Hold Installation of Officers

Washington councils of the Daughters of America are continuing their activities during the summer and many have installed their new officers at recent meetings.

Virginia Dare Council, will complete its installation when it meets tonight at 806 I street. Officers installed at its last meeting were Mrs. Genevieve Haun, councilor; Alice McNulty, associate; Mrs. Virgie Hardy, financial secretary, and Marguerite Holder, conductor. Representatives to the State council convention September 12-14, Mrs. Joan Haley, Mrs. Haun, and Miss Minnie E. Butts.

Triumph Council will hold a memorial service and drap the council's charter in memory of deceased members tomorrow night at northeast Masonic Auditorium, Eighth and F streets northeast. Golden E Council will also hold a service and drap its charter in memory of Mrs. Effie Tancill, its first councilor, at a meeting in northeast Masonic Temple, at 8 p. m. Friday evening.

A special rehearsal of teams has been called by Mrs. Mary Risler, the newly appointed drillmistress, at 7:15 p. m. Mrs. Risler has just concluded her ninth year as treasurer.

Other officers are: Mrs. Maimie Solomon, councilor; Dorothy Hancock, associate councilor; Mrs. Frances Good, vice councilor; Mrs. Della Bell, associate vice councilor; Miss Veronica Harris, junior past councilor; Mrs. Clara Olive, associate junior past councilor; Mrs. Florence Britcher, conductor; Mrs. Estelle Corson, warden; Mrs. Ethel Windsor, recording secretary; Mrs. Ella Burney, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. Eva Wood, financial secretary; Miss Josephine Thornhill, treasurer; Miss Clara Burgess, outside sentinel and trustee for 18 months; Mrs. Elizabeth Shepherd, past State councilor; Mrs. Mary Payne and Mrs. Florence Lazarus, representatives to the State council convention.

Wyeth Will Draw Plans For Armory

Municipal Architect To Work With Gen. Cox, Col. Oehmann In Designing Hall

Municipal Architect Nathan C. Wyeth yesterday was selected to draw the design for the $2,700,000 National Guard Armory to be built at the end of East Capitol street.

He will work closely with Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox and Col. John W. Oehmann, National Guard leaders in preparation of the plans for submission to the Fine Arts Commission for final approval.

Following a meeting yesterday of the Co-ordinating Committee, Col. Oehmann announced it would take at least six months to complete the plans for the huge plant, which will include a large drill hall, which may be used as an auditorium for community purposes.

660-Foot Frontage
According to a tentative plan worked out by Col. Oehmann, the entire plant will require a 660-foot frontage on East Capitol street and 495 feet on the side streets. The building will rise some 65 feet, he said.

The drill hall, which would be the first unit constructed, could be available for use in January, 1941. Col. Oehmann said. According to his plans the drill hall would measure 198 by 364. A balcony, similar to one in Chicago, would seat more than 4,500 persons.

To the right of the drill hall would be the office of the commanding officer. At the left of the hall would be the drill hall lobby. Adjacent to the commanding officer's quarters, Col. Oehmann plans a unit for his 121st Engineers. Abutting the main drill hall, he has planned a unit for the special troops and adjacent to the drill hall lobby the unit for the 280th Coast Artillery.

Rifle Gallery in Basement
A 100-yard rifle gallery will be built under the main drill hall, Col. Oehmann said. In response to queries on parking facilities, Col. Oehmann said the committee had given consideration to the problem and probably would work out a plan to take care of automobiles near the armory.

Representing the District on the committee are Capt. Patrick H. Tansy, assistant engineering commissioner; Municipal Architect Nathan C. Wyeth and Col. Oehmann, building inspector.

'Gypsies' Camp At Monument, Sing to 4,000

The gypsies built their fires beside the Washington Monument last night, and nobody made a move to chase them away. Two dozen park policemen were there, but they just shifted weight from one foot to another and gave every appearance of enjoying themselves.

Also enjoying themselves were 4,000 persons, spread across the grassy banks of the Sylvan Theater at the sixth summer festival program of 1939.

From the plains of Hungary and Rumania came the theme for last night's program, "An Evening in a Gypsy Camp," presented by the Gypsy chorus, a troupe of local singers directed by Robert Frederick Freund.

The gypsy camp was merely a pleasant excuse for bringing together singers and listeners, however, and nobody minded—least of all the audience—when the gaily garbed chorus wandered far from the open road to its inspiration.

There were two Viennese waltzes, "Live, Laugh and Love" and "Tales of the Vienna Woods." There was "La Paloma," the serenade from "The Student Prince," and Franz Schubert's "Ave Maria." Everett Palmer sang "Martha."

The two dozen songs were linked by no story or plot, by nothing except the fact it was music everybody knew and liked. The gypsies wandered casually across their outdoor stage, flanked by poplar groves. When soloists stood before the shrubbery-camouflaged microphone, the rest of the cast engaged in energetic play at the edges of the stage—flirtations, quarrels and family cooking.

For the finale, the chorus straggled off into the darkness of the Monument Grounds, following a covered wagon, and singing, "What's That Trail That beckons?"

7 Hurt Rushing From Georgia Ave. Street Car Blaze

Seven persons were treated for minor cuts and bruises at Garfield Hospital yesterday after they rushed from a Georgia avenue street car near Barry street northwest, when the control box caught fire. The fire, due to a short circuit, and confined to the control box, occurred in the 5:45 p. m. rush hour.

Treated at the hospital were Sturla Mantzios, 32, of 182 Sixth street southwest; Gertrude Farrell, 25, colored, of 1565 Montello avenue northwest; Ann Butler, 24, colored, of 716 Kenyon street northwest; Gladys Williams, 19, colored, of 1430 W street northwest; Jennie Dapson, 24, colored, of 34 B street northwest; Lillian Brooks, 44, colored, of 4219 E street northeast; and Dorothy Gaines, 22, colored, of 4341 Douglas street northeast.

The Georgia avenue car was operated by Motorman Joseph Gardner, of 927 E street northeast.

D.C. Fair Trade Bill Faces Senate Fight

Passage Expected to Bring Veto; District Committee Meets Today

The Senate District Committee will hold its final meeting of this congressional session at 3 p. m. today in an effort to clear up all local legislation that has passed the House.

An intra-committee scrap is expected over the fair trade practices bill which would enable retail dealers to enter into price-fixing agreements with manufacturers.

Tydings Lines Up Support
Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, sponsor of the legislation, which already has passed the House, has lined up substantial support for the bill in the committee, it is understood, but Chairman King is staunchly opposed to it.

If passed by the Senate without attachment to other legislation, the bill is likely to be vetoed by President Roosevelt, who several weeks ago asked Congress not to act upon it until the completion of a study by the Federal Trade Commission. The House ignored the request.

President Denounced Tactics
Two years ago Tydings attached a national price-fixing bill on the District revenue measure and thus placed the President in the position of having to accept it or vetoing the District legislation. At that time Mr. Roosevelt expressed his opposition to the Tydings amendment and denounced the tactics employed.

Other important local bills which probably will be acted on today are the amendments to the lunacy proceedings act, accepted Monday by the House, and the Commissioners' bill to extend and make permanent the use of parking meters.

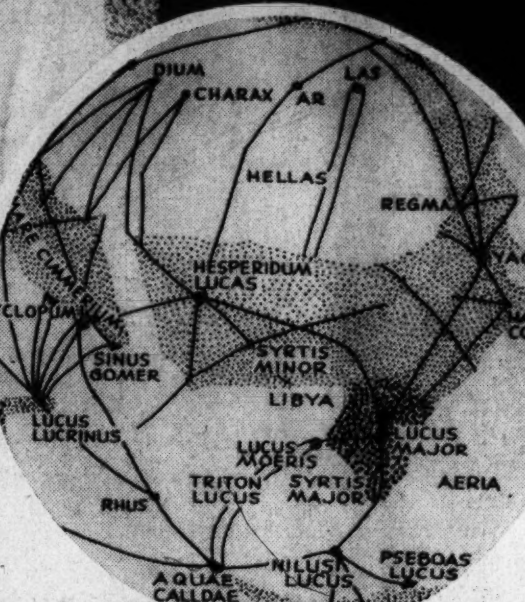

A half dozen or more minor local measures also may be reported by the committee.

White House Card Fraud Traced to Capitol Source

Guides who have been selling admission cards to the White House to tourists for $1 each have been obtaining them from the House and Senate stationery rooms, it was learned yesterday.

The Secret Service is considering asking Senators and Representatives to abandon issuance of cards to constituents, using letters instead.

Investigation has disclosed, it is said, that guides have been going to stationery rooms and obtaining cards in lots of 100 or more, representing themselves as employees of Senators or House members.

Charles Edison, acting Secretary of the Navy, and Mrs. Edison (top) look through the telescope at the Naval Observatory at the planet Mars, which will be closer to the Earth tomorrow than it has been in the past 15 years. Lower—If what they saw was diagramed, Mars would look something like this, with its reputed continents, seas and lakes.

Some 250 Washington star-gazers, including Assistant Secretary of Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison, last night took a preview squint of Mars, as it hurtled across the skyways at 54,000 miles an hour to keep a date tomorrow (with its bigger brother Earth).

The two planets will be only 36,000,000 miles apart, the shortest gap of a 15-year cycle; but last night Mars was getting close enough for a good view. Two hundred persons peeped at the canalled planet through the 26-inch refractor telescope at the Naval Observatory, while some 50 amateur astronomers inspected Mars through their own instruments on the observatory grounds.

The view, it was generally agreed, was excellent, despite a bright moon and the brilliant rods of light sweeping the sky as the District National Guard tested its new anti-aircraft searchlights.

"I could see the ice cap and canals," Edison commented. "Mars looked like a small moon." Accompanying the Edisons were Capt. J. F. Hendig, superintendent of the Observatory, and Capt. Charles W. Fisher.

Although it was at the Naval Observatory that Mars' twin moons were discovered in 1877, little is expected here in the way of new Martian discoveries tomorrow. The red planet will best be seen from the Southern Hemisphere, where noted astronomers have taken up posts.

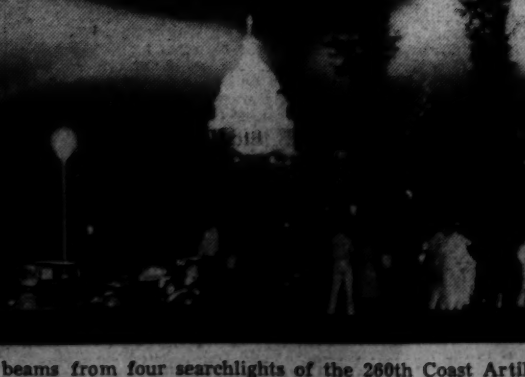

Yesterday the man who had been looking for Father Kelly was looking forward to a return to Lorton Reformatory, where he recently had been released. Police discovered that the inmate thief had been charged with 87 housebreakings since his fourteenth birthday. He confessed to at least 30 of them. More than $1,000 in loot was recovered.

Earlier this week Detective Sergts. C. E. Cannon and Marion B. Moore, of headquarters, espied a pedestrian who apparently filled the description of the man seeking Father Kelly. They trailed him more than a mile and saw him enter a home in the 1500 block of Spring place northwest. They caught him in the act of ransacking a dresser.

Fingers of Light Reach for Imaginary Enemy Over Capitol

Streaking through the dark, beams from four searchlights of the 260th Coast Artillery searched the sky above the Nation's Capitol last night for imaginary enemy planes as they were tested under the direction of Col. Walter J. Burns. Tests were made preparatory to Army maneuvers scheduled in the vicinity of Bull Run, August 5 through 19.

6,500 Bank Depositors to Get $350,000

Court Approval of Settlement Frees All but $150,000 For Distribution

Checks for $350,000 today are headed to 6,500 depositors of the closed Park Savings Bank, as a result of approval by Justice Lohrman yesterday of a $300,000 settlement of claims against the bank's directors.

The compromise ended six years of lawsuits, arising out of the tangled affairs of the institution. The other $150,000 was ordered held up until two suits against the bank are settled.

Justice Lohrman presided yesterday at a hearing on objections to the settlement, which was conditionally approved June 30 by Justice Bailey.

"Don't be afraid to speak up," the justice told the crowd of depositors in the courtroom.

A woman who did not give her name said she was a small depositor and did not object, but that she wished somebody would explain the settlement. Justice Lohrman called on Attorney E. Hilton Jackson.

Jackson said the $350,000 would be distributed among 6,500 depositors who had money in the bank before August 30, 1929, when the bank's charter expired. The other $150,000 was scheduled for eventual distribution among 18,000 persons who had deposits when the bank closed.

Justice Lohrman praised the lawyers for bringing "a happy ending to a long and troublesome litigation."

Jurisdiction Dispute Halts Attack Trial

Jurisdictional rights over a strip of territory on the Virginia side of the Potomac River intervened yesterday to halt Federal Court prosecution of James Edward Gibson, charged with a statutory offense.

Gibson was released on his personal bond by Judge Robert N. Pollard, presiding in the United States District Court. Judge Pollard ruled the Federal Government lacked jurisdiction because the crime for which Gibson was indicted was a capital offense—and therefore should be tried by the State.

The crime, Government prosecutors charged, took place on the George Washington Memorial Parkway, between the Key and Memorial bridges. The decree of condemnation by which the United States acquired the property in 1928 gave concurrent jurisdiction to Virginia.

Judge Pollard held the Federal Government might prosecute for minor offenses occurring in the area. He ruled that in crimes carrying the death penalty responsibility for prosecution belonged to the State, that the United States had jurisdiction in capital cases only on military reservations or other places where it has exclusive control.

Immediately following his release, Gibson was arrested by Federal agents and charged with Mann act violation. He will be arraigned before United States Commissioner John P. Strauss today.

The alleged victim, a 20-year-old Washington telephone operator, testified during the first day of the trial that Gibson had represented himself as a surveyor in the United States Army Engineers who wanted a secretary.

800 Taxi Men Fail to Meet License Deadline
More than 800 taxicab operators yesterday failed to get in under the deadline for new licenses, according to records of the Public Utilities Commission.

Richmond Keech, vice chairman of the commission, said a large portion of those who failed to take out a new license usually hold off until the fall season and are probably employed at present in other industries.

Strayer College Graduates 198; Md. U. President Gives Address

Something to be proud of! Lillie Lee Greeley, Jean Thompson and Catherine Cooke (top, left to right) hold the diplomas they received last night upon graduation from Strayer's College. Lower—"What a hot night for graduation," said Louise Brooks and Dorothy Dilley and they fanned themselves with the diplomas.

Strayer College last night conferred degrees upon 198 graduates of the accountancy school and awarded diplomas to 90 graduates of the secretarial training school at commencement exercises held before 1,000 guests in the Mayflower Hotel.

Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland, delivering the commencement address, warned the graduates, "There is no royal road to the heights," and urged them to "think for yourselves."

"Some would have us believe that the world is in a chaotic condition, that at no time before in history have things appeared so hopeless," Dr. Byrd said, "but when we stop to compare this age with the terrible famines and scourges of disease that swept Asia and Europe in years gone by, it does not seem to me that this world is in such chaotic condition after all."

He added that for a solution to the world's difficulties "we do not need so much new theories or sociological or economic life, but rather a return to the homely and honest principles exemplified in the professions into which you are entering."

U. S. Checks Old-Pay Deductions

Workers Urged to Get Board's Figures To Stop 'Chiseling' By Some Employers

Employees were enlisted in a drive to keep their employers within the law on old-age insurance payments when the Social Security Board yesterday invited all wage earners to request the Bureau of Old-Age Insurance for a statement of the wages credited to their account since the inception of the security program.

The board notified workers that field offices would supply them with postcards carrying the request, which are addressed to the board's Chandler Building, Baltimore, Md., statistical headquarters. In return, a statement of the workers account up to January 1, 1939, will be mailed him.

Labor Complaints Heavy
It was learned that complaints from labor sources have been heavy on the score that some employers were either deducting more from the worker's wage for old-age insurance than was legal, or were listing with the board a smaller salary than the employee was actually receiving, and thus contributing less to the insurance fund than the amount taken from the employee for that purpose.

Board officials cited the case of a chambermaid in a Washington hotel whose salary was deducted from her week's pay in variance with their records. Discovery led to correction in the majority of cases.

The recent invitation, however, is expected to act as a preventive against employer attempts to "chisel" on the payments. Board officials said it will act as a double check on a nonconventional amendment now pending to the social security act which will require employers to furnish each employee with a quarterly statement of wages paid and taxes deducted.

The board has been supplying workers with wage information for the last year, during which time more than 100,000 requests were answered. A small percentage of workers, the board said, found their accounts at variance with their own records. Discovery led to correction in the majority of cases.

Evicted Couple, 4 Children Find City Hospitable

A man, his wife and four small children sat travel-stained and penniless at the corner of Ninth and F streets northwest last night and wanted to know why they couldn't earn their own living without relief.

They said they had traveled from Huntington, Long Island, to find out why Federal authorities, and after a day of pointless wandering, found a restoration of faith in the generosity of Washington citizens.

Frank Dollar, 36, Mary, his wife, June, 4, Emma, 3, Jimmy, 13 months, and Katherine, 4 months, were evicted from their home near Huntington, because they had refused to co-operate with Federal relief authorities," according to a sheriff's notice Dollar carried.

"If you earn two dollars a day, you're a man, but if you take relief you're—well, you're nothing," said Dollar.

Nearly 100 persons who crowded around the family huddled on the curb pressed dimes and quarters and bills on them. Dollar at first refused to take anything, but was at last prevailed upon to take the money. Tears came into his eyes.

"I didn't know folks could be so good," he mumbled.

Four Tie for Medal in National Public Links Tourney With 144

Andy Oliveri Is Only D. C. Golfer Left

Shoots a 146 Card For Place; Barnes, Bert, Armstrong and Taulman Share Lead

By Merrell W. Whitteley.
A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, July 25.—A back-nine blowup by Seattle's 18-year-old Gerry Bert threw the National Public Links championship into the first four-way medal tie in 18 years here today—with Hawaii's Arthur Armstrong, Atlanta's Luke Barnes and Jack Taulman, a husky from Columbus, Ind.

The quartet each equaled the Mount Pleasant course par of 144 for the 36-hole round, and will each receive a medal for their efforts, the U. S. G. A. officials deciding against a playoff. Armstrong equaled his first day's 72. Barnes went from 71 to 73, Taulman chopped 2 shots from par and 4 shots from his original 74, with a 70, while Bert, last of the four to finish, missed a 2-foot putt on the twelfth and one slightly shorter on the fifteenth to miss a chance for the individual honors.

Oliveri Qualifies

The District's best public links player since the Claude Rippy era, 21-year-old Andy Oliveri, the pride of Rock Creek, was among the leaders with a 146 total, from a pair of the most consistent rounds the pay-as-you-play stars from Hoboken to Honolulu could master.

Oliveri's card showed 15 pars, only one via the scrambling route, as the former shoemaker's assistant and later a dental laboratory employee scored his second 73. Oliveri's first-round foe is William Brofka, of Summit, N. J., at 9:05 tomorrow morning. Brofka qualified with a 134 total, with 74 on Monday and 80 today, but three bad holes affected the latter round, including a 7-6 start.

If Oliveri should win, he will meet the Luke Barnes-Ted Gwin victor in the second round. Gwin, of Tulsa, and the co-medalist meet at 9 o'clock. This is Oliveri's third national tournament. He qualified two years ago and won his first round match last year at Cleveland but failed in the medal test.

The city's three-man representation drew a blank as far as the others were concerned, however, although Robert Morris reversed the figures of his first day's 87 with a 78 for a 165 total, and Jim Gipe lowered his 82 of Monday by a single stroke with 81 for 163. The Harding Cup Team total was 474, 32 strokes behind the winners.

Starts With Birdie

Oliveri, hitting the ball better than at any time in his 21 years, started with a birdie, chipping deep to the cup, for his only sub par effort of the day. His only miscues were on the ninth, where he three-putted from 30 feet, and the twelfth, where a tricky 3-foot slipper slipped past the cup. The other 15 holes he was par after par, with a great chip shot on the twelfth that nearly dropped, saving a shot. The others were by the regulation route.

It was the third best showing by a many star from the Nation's Capital in the 18 years of the tournament in the qualifying round. Earl McAleer, now Congressional's top amateur, won the medal in 1924 and Claude Rippy tied in 1936, the year he went to the finals.

For the 36-hole medal test over the toughest course the National tourney has ever been played, Oliveri recorded 28 pars, 3 birdies and missed par only once, 4 of these from an erring putter. His putter saved him on several occasions, to make up for the bad ones, when he went past the cup trying for birdies, and left himself a sizeable stroke coming back.

Harding Cup to Coast

The Harding Cup team trophy went to Los Angeles for the second year in a row and fourth time in the last six tournaments. Don Erickson, the 1937 runner-up, had 72, 74-146; Jack Brande, fifth low, had 75-145; and Leonard Egbert scored 74, 77-151, for a 442 total, far too good for the other 31 three-man teams.

A new book will be written into the record books when the champion is crowned Saturday afternoon as the three former titleholders in the starting field of 177 all failed to qualify, probably the most surprising factor of the medal round. Defending Champion Al Leach recorded 83 blows, including a 7 and 6 in successive holes on the back nine, and added it to a 73 for a 156 total. Two-Time Champion Charles Ferrera, from San Francisco, had 79-83-162, and Robert Wingate, the 1930 champion from Jacksonville, had 86-87-163, one of the highest totals of the tourney.

Baltimore's seven-man representation, well in the running after the first day, blew sky-high and Eddie Johnston was the only one to make the match play grade, with 74-79-153. Al Hueselmeier went from 73 to 87 for 160, the day's biggest blowup, that saw a majority of the scores go a stroke or two higher. Jack Brande's 145 total was between the co-medalists and the 146's.

Pam Barton Seeks Her Second Title In U. S. Tourney

Baltimore, July 25 (AP)—Pam Barton, British women's golf champion who won the U. S. title in 1936, will compete in this year's tourney August 21-26 at the Wee Burn Club, Noroton, Conn. It was announced today by the United States Golf Association.

Miss Barton scored a double in 1936. She already held the British championship when she triumphed at the Cane Brook Country Club, Summit, N. J. She was the first Briton to win the American title since 1913, and the first to take both in the same year since Dorothy Campbell, now Mrs. Edward Howe, in 1909.

Rookie Star Gives Browns Only 5 Hits

Joe DiMaggio Hits His Ninth Home Run, 440 Feet From Plate To Pace Attack

By the Associated Press

New York, July 25.—The Yankees' record-breaking freshman star, Atley Donald, rang up his twelfth consecutive victory against no defeats today as the run-away champions squelched the St. Louis Browns, 5 to 1, in their series opener at Yankee Stadium.

Never in danger of having his streak broken, the young right-hander gave the Browns only five hits, the first of which was a single by Billy Sullivan in the sixth inning. He struck out two and issued four walks in maintaining his amazing string.

In addition to giving Donald sparkling support, the Yankees made the most of their seven hits off Bob Harris and Howard Mills, chasing Harris from the hill in the sixth.

Joe DiMaggio led the winners' assault with a home run and a single. His homer, his ninth of the season, was a mighty blast, falling deep into the leftfield bleachers at least 440 feet from the plate. None was on base. Red Rolfe also hit for the circuit in the eighth, with the sacks empty.

During the first five innings only two Browns reached first off Donald, both on walks, and only one ball was hit out the infield. A walk, Glenn's single to center and a sacrifice fly by Pinch-Hitter Laabs gave the Browns their lone score in the seventh.

12,000 Watch Midgets In Racing Debut Here

Duke Nalon, Windy City Driver, Takes Feature Event of Night's Program at Capital Speedway; Sport Pleases Large Crowd

By Al Hailey

Midget auto racing roared into Washington last night at the new Capital speedway before more than 12,000 thrill-hungry fans who sat through a crash-less evening to watch Lead-Footed Duke Nalon, of Chicago, drive his scarlet Offenbacher speedster to victory in the 7/8-mile feature race in 6 minutes 12.44 seconds.

The "Iron Duke," in the pole position, pushed his bouncing peewee auto to the front at the start of the 30 laps and never relinquished the lead as six other racers skidded perilously near on the slick turns in the fight for first place and the night's main purse.

A dangerous hole appeared in the northwest turn of the track midway of the main event, and a near-crash occurred when Honey Purich's Bugatti special turned crosswise on the track and Johnny Favinger's V-8 maneuvered to a 42.34 seconds, and the third in 2 minutes 43.51 seconds.

Only seven of the 18 drivers scheduled to appear in the seven races, sanctioned by the American Automobile Association, showed up at the track, but these seven furnished enough high-speed thrills to satisfy the crowd that midget-car racing is worth another look-in.

The mass turnout for the debut of the sport in the Capital amazed even the local backers of the races, and had too much on the ball for Miss Decker, a former playboy's champion, even though the scores truly indicate the closeness of the match.

In both sets Miss O'Steen, who also holds the District title, got away to imposing 3-0 leads only to lapse into spotty, careless tennis and allow Miss Decker to tie the score.

In the second set Miss O'Steen trailed for the only time of the match when Miss Decker, winning her second game in succession, took a 4-2 advantage. But that marked the beginning of the end, for as she realized the victory was slipping from her grasp, Miss O'Steen turned on the heat and closed out the match with the loss of only 4 points in the last three games. She took the tenth at love and the twelfth to 15.

Yesterday's match was the final of the annual Public Parks tournament in the last three games. She took the tenth at love and the twelfth to 15.

2 Home Runs In 13th Win For Giants, 6-3

Warneke Is Victim of Blasts as Cards Bow; Carl Hubbell Victor

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, July 25.—Carl Hubbell, the old master, came back from baseball's junk yard today to pitch 13 innings of brilliant ball and give the New York Giants a 6-to-3 victory over the Cardinals in the opening game of their series at Sportsman's Park.

In pitching his third victory of the year and his first complete game since May 14, the "Meal Ticket" handed out ten hits, well scattered in all but two innings, and finally was rewarded when Frank Demaree and Mel Ott hit home runs on top of a double by Bob Seals in the thirteenth.

Hubbell, whose great left arm has been slow to recover from a winter operation last winter, looked like his old self as he pitched four Red Bird round men.

Warneke, who gave up 16 hits between Purich, a Port Washington driver, and Favinger, of Philadelphia, limped home a poor third and fourth. Marshman was last.

The veteran's performance was particularly heartening to the Giants, who had lost nine straight games before he came to the rescue. They gave him an ovation in the clubhouse.

From the sixth inning, when Whitehead's third misce enabled the Cards to tie the count, Hubbell and Warneke battled brilliantly into the thirteenth. Then Seals doubled to right for his third hit of the

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

A contributor who signs himself "Ex-Fan" says he is cheered by the reminder that Bucky Harris' contract as manager of the Nats expires this year and that Clark Griffith has made no mention, as yet, of rehiring Harris.

"That Harris' regime as manager of the Washington Club might possibly end this year," he writes, "is encouraging news to thousands of fans who were ardent followers of the Nats until Harris came back in 1935. Washington has lost 20-odd games this season by a one-run margin. It is fair to assume that a capable manager would have won at least half of those games. Take 10 or 12 of those losses and put them in the win column and the Washington team is in the money."

One of the things this department has consistently refused to believe is that Harris is responsible for the present low estate of the Nats. And it should be significant, too, that baseball men around the league continually wonder that Harris can keep his team hovering around fifth place with a pitching staff comprised of Leonard and Krakauskas and the crude material he finds on his hands.

And as far as those 20-odd losses by one run that the Nats have suffered this season, a close analysis reveals that fact to be something of a credit to Harris. It has been something of a feat for him to get his sort of club that close to the opposition.

There has been no intimation by Griffith as to who his 1940 manager will be, and if he follows custom he will make no pronouncement on the subject until after the close of the current campaign. But the Nats' owner, admitting he has given Harris under-developed rookies for key positions, has publicly absolved Harris of blame for the Nats' second-division standing.

Report of Sheehan Coming Here Very Funny

The most amusing report of the past week was the word from Minneapolis that Manager Sheehan, of the successful Minneapolis Millers, in the American Association might move to Washington as manager of the Nats next season. That deduction is as far-fetched as report of a rapprochement between Mussolini and Haile Selassie.

One of the things Clark Griffith never does is import a new manager for his Washington team. If he does make a change in managers, his new man is always a member of the tight little Washington group. Managers in search of a job might sell themselves to other magnates, but Griffith always picks his man on the basis of personal knowledge of his capabilities and his habits. 'Twas ever thus.

When Griffith stepped out as the active manager of the Nats in 1929 after acquiring sufficient stock to control the club as president, he found his new manager from within the ranks. It was George McBride, a shortstop who had played for Griffith for nine years.

McBride's 1921 team finished fourth and Griffith was in a mood to change managers. But he didn't go far afield. He promoted the veteran outfielder Clyde Milan to the managerial job. As with McBride, there was a personal equation between Griffith and Milan.

Donie Bush, an "outsider," managed in 1923

The closest Griffith ever came to naming a manager who did not serve a long term with him as a ball player before getting the pilot's job was in 1923. In that year, after Milan quit the game because of illness, Griffith selected Donie Bush as his manager. Bush had been with the Washington club as a third baseman for only one year.

Apparently, though, Bush's one-year term with the Nats caused Griffith to regard him as something of a foreigner, at least not as a member of the tight little group that has always comprised the Washington club and its board of strategy. Griffith decided on a new man for 1924, and it was Bucky Harris, the young second baseman who had joined the club three years before.

When Harris and Griffith parted by mutual consent in 1928, Griffith turned down the applications of a dozen would-be managers of the Nats with big league managerial records behind them. He dipped into the ranks of his old players again and came up with Walter Johnson.

In 1923, when Griffith tired of Johnson as a manager he gave the job to another of his own players, Joe Cronin. And at the end of the 1934 season after Cronin departed for Boston and Griffith again needed a manager, who should he sign but his old friend Harris. They're still very friendly and that fact, combined with the old gentleman's aversion to outsiders, augurs well for Harris' retention.

Bobby Riggs Tops Advance At Seabright

All Favorites Survive Second Round Play; Hunt Also Moved Up

By the Associated Press

Seabright, N. J., July 25.—The Nation's top-ranking tennis amateur, 21-year-old Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, waltzed through his opening match in the Seabright Invitation Singles Tournament today, losing only three games as he paced a representative field into the third round.

Seeking to repeat his victories of 1937 and 1938 and retire the historic Seabright Bowl, Riggs gained a 6-1, 6-2

Devil Heat in Rockingham Pays $1,565 Ticket

Howellville, Foggy Day Bring Split

Three Ticket Holders Share Rich Pay-Off; Friendly Paul Wins Fifth Straight

Salem, N. H., July 25.—The daily double pay-off at Rockingham Park today was split as the result of a heat between W. E. Johnson's Howellville and T. J. Healey's Foggy Day in the first race.

The combination of Howellville, a rank outsider paying $121.80 for $2, and P. A. Markey's June Bee, winner of the second race, paid three ticket holders of lucky tickets $155.60 for $2. Those who paired the well-backed Foggy Day and June Bee, also a long shot at $17.40, received only $54.00 for $2.

Had Howellville won the first race alone he would have paid 146 for $1.

Mrs. F. C. Dunn's Friendly Paul scored his fifth consecutive triumph in New England today in taking the Concord Purse, mile and one-sixteenth feature at Rockingham Park, by a length from W. F. Mannagh's Short Cake.

Despite his brilliant record of four straight victories at Suffolk Downs, Friendly Paul was second choice of the crowd of 10,000 which made M. J. White's Peter Argo the favorite.

Long lengths behind Peter Argo, the favorite, was Mrs. A. J. Able's Sir Mowlee, which was a neck back of Short Cake.

Short Cake cut out the early pace with Mrs. W. R. Flemming's Lovey day and a Frenchy named Jockey Maurice Berger sent Friendly Paul down the rail until half way down the back stretch when he drove him past Short Cake and the outside.

Through the far end and the outside, the favorite took to the rail again when straightened out for home.

The time was 1:48 3/5 with Friendly Paul paying $70.00, $30.00 and $6.00, and Sir Mowlee, $6.00 and $6.00, and Sir Mowlee, $6.00.

Veteran of Majors Dies at Long Beach

Long Beach, Calif., July 25 (AP)—George (Peaches) Graham, 62, one-time catcher for the Chicago Cubs and the Boston Braves, died today.

Graham's son, Jack, is first baseman of the Southern Association.

Graham played in major league baseball more than 30 years ago.

The executive committee of the Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Association will meet this week to consider action on a proposal by the Capital Transit Co. to build a car and bus station between Eastern avenue and Kalmia road northwest.

James I. Turner, the association secretary, said the meeting had no been set, but that the committee wants to hear the attitude of residents of the section on the project.

Bar to Hear Sanders

William Sanders, chief of the juridical division, Pan American Union, will address the Federal Bar Association at 12:30 p. m. today at the Madrillon Restaurant.

This developed to be the actual distribution. High cards accounted for the remaining tricks, the two heart losers being discarded on the long diamonds.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Not many players could elicit a smile from their partners on their play of this deal. It involves a shorting of trumps and an inverted grand coup. L. E. R., the contributor, writes:

"A recent quiz hand reminded me of one that occurred some time ago. Fortunately for declarer, he was unable to make the safety play recommended and was forced to resort to a backward grand coup. The deal and the bidding were as follows:

The bidding:

3 ♦	Pass	6 ♣	Dble
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: K ♥.

South took the ace of hearts and the king and ace of diamonds and trumped a third round of diamonds. A club was led to the dummy and a heart return trumped three times. South led the ten of spades and then won the last two tricks on the lead up to the ace-queen. He made six spades, losing only one trump trick.

Champions must know safety plays. A nice example is shown in this hand, played by Philip Abramsohn at the Mayfair Club of New York.

Abramsohn sat North; his contract was four spades.

East played the king and queen of clubs and followed with the jack club. Abramsohn, instead of trumping the third club, discarded a low heart, providing against the danger of four trumps being in one adversary's hand.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

Chapter I.

JODY carried the completed necklace in his pocket so that he might look at it often, until it began to look sticky and appearance from crumbled biscuits and squirrel tails and other such articles. He washed the necklace at the sink-hole and hid it on a raft in his bedroom.

There had been nothing special for Christmas the year before except a wild turkey for dinner because there had been no money.

This year there was the money left from the sale of the bear cubs. Penny set aside a portion for cotton seed and said the rest might be spent for Christmas.

Ma Baxter said, "Now if we go to the doin's, I want to go tradin' for Volusia. For a then. I want me four yards won't I have Christmas decent?"

Penny said, "Wife, your finger's no secret. I ain't quarrelin', for you're plumb welcome to all I got. But seems to me four yards won't no more'n make you a pair o' drawers."

"If you got to know, I aim to fix over my weddin' dress. Hit's long enough, for I ain't growed up no down. I done my growin' sideways, and I aim to set in a piece down the front so's it'll meet around me."

Penny patted her broad back. "Now don't take on. A good wife like you deserves a piece o' goods to set down the front of her weddin' dress."

She said, mollified, "You jest tootin' me. I don't never ask for nothin' and you git so you don't expect me to ask for nothin'."

"I know. Hit frets me, you makin' out with so little. I'd love to fetch you a bolt o' silk, and do the Lord spare me, one day you'll have a well o' water at the house, and not have to wash no more at the sink hole."

She said, "I want to go to Volusia tomorrow."

He said, "Now give Jody and me a day-two to hunt some, and mebbe we kin carry some meat and hides to the store and you kin trade to your heart's content."

The first day's hunt brought nothing. "When you ain't lookin' for deer," Penny said, "they're all over the place. When you hunt 'em, you'd think you was in a tormented city."

A puzzling incident occurred. South of the island Penny tried to put the dogs on the track of what appeared to be a small yearling or a well-grown fawn. The dogs refused to take the trail. Penny did a thing he had not done in years. He broke a switch and thrashed old Julia for her stubbornness. She yelled and whined, but still refused. The mystery became clear at the end of the day. Flag showed up, as he had made a habit of doing, in the middle of the hunt. Penny exclaimed sharply, then knelt to the ground to compare his tracks with those the dogs had refused to follow. They were the same. Old Julia, wiser than he, had recognized either the track or the scent of the newest Baxter.

He said, "That makes me feel right humble. A dog knowin' what you mought call kin folks."

JODY WAS ELATED. He felt a deep gratitude to the old hound. He should have hated having Flag frightened by their pursuit.

The second day's hunt was more profitable. They found deer feeding in the swamp. Penny shot a large buck. He trailed still another, a smaller, and jumped it in a bay-head. He gave Jody a shot, and as he missed, shot it down. They had come on foot, for slow-trailing was the only chance these days of getting game, except by accident. Jody tried to carry the smaller deer, but its weight knocked him almost to the earth. He stayed with the kill while Penny went back for the horse and wagon. Flag was with them when they returned.

Penny called, "This pet o' yours hunt as good as the dogs."

On the way home, Penny pointed out where the bears were feeding. They were eating the berries of the saw palmetto.

"Hit clean 'em out and tonics 'em. They go into their winter beds fat as butter. The bears is like to be out salvation for fresh this year."

"What else eats the berries, Pa?"

"The deer loves 'em. And leave me tell you, do you fill a demi-john with 'em and pour Cuby rum over 'em and leave 'em stand five months, you've got a drink would make even your Ma shout Hallelujah, could you once git it down her."

Where the palmettos began to grow on higher land and merge into black-jack, Penny pointed out narrow trails leading into the gopher holes. The rattlesnakes had denned up for the winter, but on warm bright days they came out for a few hours and sunned themselves near the holes. It seemed to Jody that all the invisible creatures of the scrub walked in plain sight before Penny's eyes.

At the house, Jody helped him skin the deer and dress out the hides and the hindquarters, which would be the only salable portions. Ma Baxter tried the meat from the forequarters and put it down for keeping in its own fat. The bones and scraps were boiled in the wash pot for the dogs. The family feasted that night on the hearts and livers. There was not much wasted on Baxter's island.

In the morning, Penny said, "We got to agree now, will we stay with Grandma Hutto tonight or come home. De we spend the night, Jody's got to stay a while to milk and feed the dogs and chickens."

Jody said, "Trixie's near about dry, Pa. And we kin leave feed. Leave me go, but please let's stay with Grandma Hutto."

Penny said to his wife, "You want to stay there tonight?"

"No, I don't. Her and me don't never swap much honey."

"Then we'll not stay. Jody, you kin go, but no teasin' to stay after we git there."

"What must I do with Flag? Caint he foller along so Grandma kin see him?"

MA BAXTER burst out, "That blasted fawn! They ain't never been such a nuisance on the place, even countin' you."

He said with hurt pride, "I reckon I'll jest stay with him."

Penny said, "Now boy, you gretur and ferret him. He ain't a dog, he ain't a young un, though you've near about made one outen him. You can't carry him places like a gal would a play-dolly."

He tied Flag reluctantly in the shed and changed into clean clothes to go to Volusia. Penny was dressed in his broadcloth suit with the yarmuk sleeves, with his black hat on top of his head. The roaches had eaten a hole in the brim, but it was after all a hat. He had no other except his wool hunt-making cap and his palmetto field hat. Jody was in his best, brogan shoes, homespun breeches, big wire grass hat and a new black alpaca coat bound with red tape. Ma Baxter was clean and crisp in a new dress made of the blue and white checked gingham from Jacksonville. It was a darker blue than she wanted, but the check was pretty. She wore her blue sun bonnet but carried her black frilled bonnet to put on when she should approach the village.

It was pleasant, jogging down the sand road in the wagon. Jody sat on the floor of the wagon body with his back against the seat. It was interesting to see the scrub drop away behind him as he watched it. The sense of progressing was more acute than when he faced forward. The wagon jolted and his thin rump felt bruised by the time they reached the river. He had nothing much to think about and he gave himself over to thoughts of Grandma Hutto. She would be surprised to know that he was angry with Oliver. He pictured her face with satisfaction. Then he felt uncomfortable. He felt that he was angry as he had always felt, except that through the summer he had actually forgotten her. Perhaps he would not tell her that he was through with Oliver. He saw himself being kind to her and maintaining a noble silence. The imagined scene pleased him. He made up his mind definitely to inquire politely after Oliver's health.

Penny had the deer meat in two pokes. The hides were in crocus sacks. Ma Baxter had a basket of eggs and a small pot of butter to trade at the store, and another basket containing gifts for Grandma Hutto: a quart of new syrup, a peck of sweet potatoes, and a ham of the Baxters' sugar-cured ham. She would not have gone empty handed even to the house of an enemy.

PENNY HALLOOED on the west side of the river to call the ferry from the east. The sound echoed down the river. A boy appeared on the opposite bank. He came leisurely. For an instant it seemed to Jody that the boy had an enviable life, pulling the ferry back and forth across the river. Then it occurred to him that such a life was quite without freedom. The boy would be for such a boy no hunts, no jaunts into the scrub, no flag. He was glad he was not the ferryman's son. He said "Hi" to him with condescension. The boy was ugly and bashful. He helped lead the Baxters' horse on the ferry with lowered head. Jody was filled with curiosity about his life.

He asked, "You got a gun?"

The boy jerked his head sideways in a negative and fastened his eyes on the east shore of the river. Jody recalled Fodder-wing longingly. From the minute he used to come in sight, Fodder-wing had talked to him. He gave up the new boy as a bad job. Ma Baxter was anxious to do her trading before she went visiting. They drove the wagon the short distance to the store and laid their articles of exchange on the counter. Storekeeper Boyles was in no hurry to trade. He wanted news of the scrub. The Forrester had given an incredible account of conditions after the flood. A few hunters from the Volusia territory had been there and had reported game almost impossible to find. The bears were trading hotk along the river, which they had not done in years. He wanted Penny's verification of the tales.

"Hit's ever word true," Penny said.

He leaned over the counter and settled himself for talk.

Ma Baxter said, "You know I can't stand on my feet too long. If you men'll agree on your trade, I'll do my buyin' and go on to Miss Hutto's. Then you kin talk here all day."

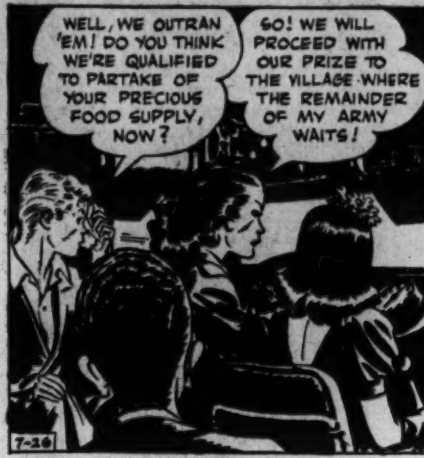

Boyles weighed out the meat promptly. With venison scarce, he could find a ready sale for it at a good price. The river steamer would take a haunch or two by way of novelty to the English and Yankee travelers. He examined the hides carefully, and at last expressed his satisfaction with their condition. He had an order and could pay $5.00 each. The rate was higher than the Baxters had hoped for. Ma turned to the dry goods counter with a complacent air. She was high-handed and would have only the best. He was out of brown alpaca. He could send for it by the next boat, he said. She shook her head. It was too far to send back for it from the island.

Sallie Pickett Dies; Rites to Be Held Today

Former Washington Society Editor Ill Since Last Winter

The Rev. Ivan H. Dugan, assistant pastor, will conduct funeral services in the National City Christian Church on Thomas Circle at 2 p. m. today for Mrs. Sallie Pickett, former society editor of the Washington Star, who died early yesterday in her home at 1942 Biltmore street northwest.

She will be buried in a private service in Rock Creek Cemetery tomorrow.

Suffered Heart Attack
Mrs. Pickett, who had been society editor of the Washington Times and acting society editor of The Post before taking a similar post on the Star, became inactive several years ago, but wrote an occasional article.

She became ill last winter but appeared to have recovered until stricken with a heart attack early this month.

For more than 18 years she "covered" every social activity at the White House. She entered newspaper work a few years after coming to Washington in 1892, and from her memories of Capital society she had been preparing material for a book.

She had been a president of the Woman's National Press Club and first vice president of the Newspaperwomen's Club. She also served the Quota Club as president and was a member of the Women's City Club, the Arts Club, the Kentucky Society and the National City Christian Church.

Had Three Children
She leaves a sister, Mrs. William A. Milken, of Washington, and three children by her first husband, William H. Harris, Cleveland, Ohio, inventor. They are:

Edwin V. Harris, of New York, former city editor of The Post; Beverly Humphreys Harris, with whom she lived, and Mrs. Charles Binns Tebb, Washington. Lillian Beverly Tebb, and Charles Binns Tebb, Jr., grandchildren, also survive.

Mrs. Pickett's second husband, Theodore John Pickett, Washington attorney, died in 1918.

Department heads of the Star were named honorary pallbearers. They are Ben McKelway, Col. Roy C. Herron, Gideon A. Lyon, Herbert Corn, Denman Marjorie Germond, Burns, Clifford K. Berryman, Dave McCarty, Earl Heap, Carl Stodder, Guy Collins, Neville Miller, J. Gould Lincoln, Frank Hurley, Joe Brown and Tom Harlow.

Committee Named
The Woman's National Press Club named this funeral committee: Ruby Black, Bess Furman, Vesta Cummings, Christine Sadler, Mary Johnson, Josephine Hemphill, Hope Ridings, Miller, Isabelle Kinnear Griffin, Una Frank, Margaret Wade, Jones, Roberta Bradshaw, Elizabeth E. Poe, Grace Porter Hopkins, Maude McDougal, Lilly Lykes Shepard, Winifred Mallan, Vylla Poe Wilson and Elizabeth Mae Craig.

The following were announced as a committee from the Newspaperwomen's Club: Ned Brown Harris, Margaret Hays, Margaret Germond, Sophie Kepner, Helene Livingston Kravatz, Grace McGerr, Josephine Tighe, Williams, Jackie Martin, Harriet Held, Lelia Rathon, Alice Hutchings Drake, Margaret Wade, Marie Manning Gash, Alice Eversman, Mrs. Joshua Evans, Evelyn Condon, Anna Youngman, Dolly Shepperson, Lelia MacLinn, Helen Petteer Cook, Elisabeth Poe, Vylla Poe Wilson.

Funeral Today For Dr. Mansfield, Museum Scientist

Services for Dr. Wendell C. Mansfield, 65, assistant geologist and paleontologist with the New National Museum, will be tomorrow at 10 a. m. from Hines' funeral home, 2901 Fourteenth street northwest, followed by burial in Rock Creek Cemetery. Dr. Mansfield died at his home, 6718 Piney Branch road northwest, Monday.

Born in Sinclairville, N. Y., Dr. Mansfield attended Fredonia State Normal School, and graduated from Syracuse University in 1908. Following a period of teaching in Sayville, Long Island, he took master's and doctor's degrees from George Washington University. He had been associated with the New National Museum for 19 years.

Surviving him are two brothers, E. D. Mansfield, of Rochester, N. Y., and William S. Mansfield, of Washington; two sisters, Mrs. Charles Chain, of Sinclairville, N. Y., and Mrs. F. A. Soule, of Glen Ridge, N. J.

Rev. Dr. Herman Weber, Church Editor, Dies
East Orange, N. J., July 25.—The Rev. Dr. Herman Carl Weber, 66, secretary of the General Council of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and editor of The Yearbook of American Churches, died today.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Kate Albin Weber, two daughters, Mrs. Kenneth Wilkinson, of West Orange, and Miss Kate D. Weber, and a son, Laurence A. Weber.

Sewing Machine Heir Is Married to Divorcee
New York, July 25 (AP)—Robert Vanderpool Clark, 21, "glamor boy" and sewing machine heir, today married twice-divorced Mrs. Suzanne de la Salle Chambers Hittman, 15 years his senior.

Clark is a grandson of the late Alfred Corning Clark, one of the founders of the Singer Sewing Machine Co. The couple left for Miami, Fla., on their honeymoon.

Paris Signs Pact to Cut Tax on U. S. Business
Paris, July 25 (AP)—A commercial treaty reducing taxes on French business in the United States and American businesses in France was signed today by Ambassador William C. Bullitt and Foreign Minister Bonnet.

The treaty was designed to replace a double taxation agreement dated April 27, 1932.

What Beast Wears Camel Bell? Guess Again, Says Marylander

Mrs. Eleanor Jean Carter, of College Park, Md., with her collection of bells—from door bells to elephant bells

Mrs. Eleanor Jean Carter, of College Park, Also Has Goat and Elephant Chimes Among Many in Collection; (Donkey Is Answer)

What kind of animal wears a camel bell?

Be careful. If you say a camel, you are wrong. The answer, according to Mrs. Eleanor Jean Carter, of College Park, Md., is a donkey.

Mrs. Carter and her husband, Edward P. Carter, are bell enthusiasts. They have a collection of 60 bells, ranging from door bells to elephant bells.

"Camel bells," Mrs. Carter explained, "are worn by the donkeys that lead camel caravans across the deserts. The sound of the bells keeps the camels from getting separated in heavy sandstorms."

Mrs. Carter has a camel bell made about 1830, a Chinese gong and some Persian goat bells.

Ahoy There, Mars! Earthlings to Radio Message Thursday
New York, July 25 (INS)—The first scientific attempt to communicate by radio with Mars will be made Thursday night, Dr. Clyde Fisher, head of the Hayden Planetarium, announced tonight.

The signal will be sent from the Baldwin (Long Island) Station of Press Wireless, Dr. Fisher stated, at approximately 11:22 p. m. (E. D. T.).

Dr. Fisher added: "A high-frequency radio transmitter... with a power of 20,000 watts... will send a long dash signal in the direction of Mars."

"If that signal breaks through the magnetic layer of the upper atmosphere... it should be reflected directly back to the earth by the mineral substance of Mars."

"To hear the signal's return 40 powerful short-wave receivers will be tuned in at Baldwin to listen on different frequencies... there will, of course, be no attempt to communicate with any so-called Martian beings."

Rearm Morally, Britisher Urges
Monterey, Calif., July 25 (AP)—Moral rearmament was one of the major forces in preventing the outbreak of international war during the past year, Gen. C. R. P. Winsor, retired British army officer, declared today.

He told 1,500 delegates from 25 nations attending the second World Moral Rearmament Assembly "the answer to the world crisis is in moral rearmament."

He said the threat of a new international conflict, Gen. Winsor asked, "Do you want it? It is going to be 50,000 times worse than the last."

Adm. Gherardi Succumbs in California

Was Naval Attache In Germany and a Former Hydrographer

Rear Admiral Walter R. Gherardi, American naval attache to Germany, 1914-17, and former hydrographer of the Navy, died Monday night at Bohemian Grove, near San Francisco, the Navy Department announced yesterday.

Well known in Washington, Admiral Gherardi had served here on numerous occasions and made his home in Chevy Chase, Md. Recently detached from duty as president of the general court-martial board at San Francisco, he was on leave pending retirement for age September 1.

Born in Honolulu, the son of the late Rear Admiral Bancroft Gherardi, he entered the Naval Academy in 1895. During the Spanish American War, the admiral served on the U. S. S. Marblehead and Indiana in the West Indies. On his return from Germany when the United States entered the World War, he was given command of the DeKalb and was awarded the Navy Cross for taking the vessel through patrol duty successfully.

After the armistice, Admiral Gherardi served with the Peace Commission in Paris and later commanded the aircraft squadrons in the Atlantic. He was aide to Secretary of the Navy Wilbur from 1924 to 1935, and commandant of the Navy Yard until 1938. He also served with the general board here for two years.

An automobile accident while serving as Secretary Wilbur's aide impaired Gherardi's eyesight to such an extent that he failed of promotion to rear admiral. A special act of Congress was passed thereafter authorizing his advancement for shore duty only.

His widow, two sons and daughter survive. Burial will be in Arlington.

Roosevelt Looks Over Quarters for Three New Aides
President Roosevelt, who has traveled more than any President in the Nation's history, yesterday took the shortest trip he has made since he moved into the White House. He went across the street to the State Department—and didn't come back for an hour and a half.

The occasion was an inspection tour of the quarters recently assigned to his three "passion for anonymity" assistants and Budget Director Harold D. Smith and the National Resources Committee.

Smith and two of the new administrative assistants—William H. McReynolds and Lauchlin Currie—accompanied the President during the inspection of their offices and returned with him to the White House.

Mongolia Crushed In Air, Says Japan
Hsinking, Manchukuo (Wednesday), July 26 (INS)—Declaring that the Soviet-Outer Mongolian air force is "completely crippled," the Japanese today claimed 68 Russian planes have been shot down in fighting over the Mongol-Manchukuoan frontiers during the past two months.

During the past three days 103 Soviet airplanes were downed, the communiqué declared.

Infantry and artillery battles were reported raging in the Khalka River area after 2,000 Soviet-Mongol troops crossed the river.

2-Day Rain Needed To Save Crops
Scores of fires in forests and brushlands emphasized yesterday the severity of drought which the Northeastern States have suffered for a month.

Agricultural authorities agreed a two-day rain was needed to save crops, many of which were approaching total loss, in New York, New Jersey, central New England and eastern Pennsylvania.

Lion Claws 2, Panics Old Home Week Crowd
Watertown, N. Y., July 25 (AP)—A 250-pound lion broke from its cage at a carnival today, clawed two attendants and terrified an old home week crowd before it was recaptured an hour and a half later.

Brief 'Stay-in' Held By Armour C. I. O.

Chicago, July 25 (AP)—A C. I. O. Packing House Workers Organizing Committee grievance group tonight held a brief "stay-in" demonstration at the main plant of Armour & Co., in protest against what the union said was the management's refusal to resume discussion.

At noon the P. W. O. C. held a brief demonstration before an Armour plant.

Conferees Agree On U. S. Court Administrator
A joint Congressional Committee agreed yesterday upon legislation providing an administrator for Federal courts and granting the judiciary "financial independence."

Senator Hatch (Democrat), New Mexico, said the compromise of separate Senate and House bills would divorce appropriations for the judiciary from control of the Justice Department but permit the Budget Bureau to recommend deductions.

The administrator, who will receive $10,000 a year, will be appointed by the Supreme Court. With the aid of a judiciary council in each of the Federal circuits, he will keep a regular check on the pockets of the courts and their work.

Holdup Is Linked To Communists
San Francisco, July 25 (AP)—A witness at the Harry Bridges deportation hearing testified today that members of the Communist Party were responsible for a $40,000 holdup in San Francisco to obtain funds for the party.

Merriell R. Bacon, Portland, Ore., policeman who said he had been detailed by his chief in 1930 to join the Communist Party as a secret police agent, told of the robbery and also said he had heard Communists praise the murder of a Los Angeles police officer.

Man Kills Wife, Son; Fires Home
Theresa, Wis., July 25 (AP)—District Attorney Clarence Traeger said Walter H. Clix, 41-year-old telegrapher, shot and killed his wife and 6-year-old son and then seriously wounded himself today.

Clix set fire to his home after putting a bullet through his own chest, the district attorney reported. Clix was given a 50-50 chance of recovering.

Madge Evans Elops With Playwright
York Village, Me., July 25 (AP)—Without waiting to change the dress she wore in the final act of the play "Brief Moment," the Ogunquit Playhouse, blonde film star Madge Evans, 30, eloped tonight with Sidney Kingsley, 32, Pulitzer prize-winning playwright, and was married here by a justice of the peace.

An official of the playhouse, who made public the wedding, said Damian O'Flynn, Ogunquit actor, was best man for Kingsley and quoted O'Flynn as saying the honeymooners left in a southerly direction by motor after the ceremony.

Commissioners Delay Filling Street's Post
District Commissioners yesterday postponed appointment of a successor to Elwood Street, who left the post of welfare director in May. It is expected the matter will be considered by the Commissioners at their next meeting, Friday.

Must Choose Love or Money

Within the next eight weeks, Barbara Smith, 18-year-old, will have to choose between love in a cottage on an orchestra leader's salary, or live single on the patent medicine millions of her mother, it was reported in New York.

Barbara is shown with her fiancé, Ray Morton before she sailed last week for Bermuda. Barbara's mother, Mrs. William Z. Breed, said her daughter could expect no financial assistance if she marries Ray, it was stated.

William R. Bush Dies Suddenly On Business Trip
William R. Bush, 47, southeastern division sales manager for the Johns-Manville Co., died yesterday in Norfolk, Va., where he was stricken Friday while on a business trip.

Mr. Bush, whose home was at 2901 Connecticut avenue, had lived in Washington for the last 20 years. He became associated with Johns-Manville in 1920, after several years with the Southern Railroad. He was a member of the Congressional Country Club.

Surviving are the wife, Mrs. Veril Bush; a son, William R. Bush, Jr., and a daughter, Mrs. Charles C. Chestnut, all of Washington.

Funeral services and burial will take place tomorrow in Knoxville, Tenn., Mr. Bush's birthplace.

Working Off Relief Grants Is Slavery, Says Plasterer
Hackensack, N. J., July 25 (AP)—Doing odd jobs for his home town to work off relief grants is slavery in the eyes of Ernest Gross, 56-year-old plasterer.

Rebelling against a new order of the mayor and council that relief clients work at the rate of 50 cents an hour, Gross signed a complaint charging Postmaster John Sheridan violated the State poor law in refusing him food orders because he wouldn't work for them.

Gross charged his constitutional rights under the anti-slavery amendment were being violated.

Dog Must Sign To Get Legacy

Baltimore, July 25 (AP)—John H. Bouse, registrar of wills, must write a dog a formal letter, and it's going to put the United States mails in an awful pickle.

Mrs. Mary R. Herman left a $2,000 trust fund for her dog, Flossie. Maryland law requires Bouse to notify any beneficiary by registered letter immediately a will is filed for probate.

But addressees must sign for registered letters in person. Bouse hopes the mailman has a nice time teaching Flossie to write.

Debt Settlement Is Briton's Hope
London, July 25 (AP)—Lord Samuel told the House of Lords today he hoped that Lord Lothian, ambassador-designate to the United States, would be able to make "some progress toward solution of this grave matter"—Britain's war debts to the United States.

He said he hoped for such action, "firstly, because it concerns our financial credit with the United States and with other countries, which may be of great moment should there be war; secondly, because it has a strong political bearing upon opinion in America..."
